We cannot allow this opportunity to pass without extending to the man who is responsible for this church improvement, the plaudits which his liberality deserves. For over forty years Mr. Strong has been an honored resident of Tecumseh, and no more public spirited citizen has ever lived within its boundaries. The instrument cost $2800. The old organ was turned in as a partial payment, and Mr. Strong's personal check liquidated the balance. No other person in the church, or out of it, was called upon for one cent. It was his own free individual gift. He has placed the members of his own church under obligations to him, and he has made a record which the wealthy men of this community may wisely emulate.

The church choir will remain unchanged. Miss Jennie Root will be retained as regular organist, and the manner in which she performed her role last Sunday demonstrates that she is fully competent to incite the new organ to its best efforts.

THE PRIDE of WOMAN.

A clear pearly and transparent skin is always a sign of pure blood, and all persons troubled with dark, greasy, yellow or blotched skin can rest assured that their blood is out of order. A few doses of BEGG'S BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER will remove the causes and the skin will become clear and transparent. Try it, and if satisfaction is not given it will cost you nothing. It is fully warranted.

The Single Apron Improvement.

Its striking advantages are—three rollers as compared with six; one canvas versus three; six bearings as compared with twelve; three buckles versus twelve. The draft of the machine is thereby very materially reduced. The apron is driven from the underside, hence the upper side or top of apron is comparatively loose and easily passes, without friction, under the apron guides.

The only Binder adjustments on the Wood are the three desirable ones—Regulating size of Bundle—Regulating tightness of Binding—Regulating position of Band. Each of these adjustments is made instantly.

The new Enclosed-Gear Mower is the best mower ever made.

Farmers should call and examine these machines before buying.

We have received from the publisher, Will L. Thompson, two beautiful concert quartettes, Come where the Lillies Bloom, and Friendship, Love and Song. As the details of the great Pennsylvania flood are gathered together, the appalling character of the catastrophe increases. It is now estimated that the number of lives lost will reach 15,000 and the property destroyed will reach fully fifty millions. The Cambria Iron Mill alone was the largest industrial establishment in the state. A full account of the horror will be found on the second page, to which we devote all of our available space.

The latest swindling scheme the granger is called to meet is worked by "fruit tree agents." They propose to plant the trees and accept as pay half the fruit for the first twelve years. The farmer who enters the deal gives a bond of $500 for the faithful performance of his agreement. This the agent registers against the land. The agent's confederate calls a little later and makes an extravagant offer for the farm. The bond is discovered in a search for the records, and rather than lose the chance for an advantageous sale the dupe pays off the bond. The customer for the farm is seen no more and the swindlers divide the spoils.

The old saying, "Misery loves company," found a special exemplification in our experience last Friday. Upon going to the depot at Onsted to take the train we found that Prof. Daniels and a party of Ridgeway school pupils were left also. The party consisted of Prof. H. W. Daniels, Smith Pocklington, Lee Sowle, and Misses. Flotia Smith, Lottie Arner, Linnie Coryell, Alta Gilmore, Lulu Gilmore, Della Freer, Minnie Barrett, Leila Sutton, Montie Florence, Bertie Cadmus, Floyd Smith. The party went up on Wednesday to visit at Prof. Daniels father's, intending to return Friday afternoon, but on arriving at the depot they—changed their minds. After interviewing the business houses of Onsted and seeing all the sights they returned to Mr. Daniels and spliced out their visit half a day longer. A jollier party on a rainy day we have seldom met and we presume Mr. Daniels' family were fully reconciled to their prolonged stay.

HARVESTERS AND BINDERS.

There are several harvesting and binding machines in the market now, and the competition between them is waxing hot as harvest season approaches. Without disparaging other machines, we confidently assert that the Milwaukee Junior leads them all. In these FIVE particulars its superiority is unquestioned;

1. DURABILITY—In the construction of the Junior, the best material the country affords is used: skilled mechanics are employed in our factory, and each machine is thoroughly tested and inspected before shipment. We shall continue to furnish, regardless of expense, the most durable Harvester and Binder, and depend upon an appreciative and intelligent public to maintain the high standard of the Milwaukee Junior.

2. SIMPLICITY—Complication is a thing to be avoided in all kinds of machinery, and this has been effectually done in the Junior Harvester and Binder. In adding new features to our machine, it has always been our aim to simplify rather than complicate and in this way we have greatly reduced the number of wearing parts, thereby increasing its durability and lessening its draft.

3. EASE OF MANAGEMENT—In placing the levers, we have carefully considered the convenience of the operator, and so arranged them that he can put the machine in proper adjustment for cutting all kinds of grain without leaving his seat, and so easily are the different changes made that a boy who can guide the team can operate the Milwaukee Junior.

4. LIGHTNESS OF DRAFT—Our Junior is the first and still remains the only successful two-horse harvester and binder on the market, and is so acknowledged by all our competitors, its weight being only 1150 pounds.

5. PRICE—No other machine in the market of equal value is sold at so low a figure. Any farmer can test this assertion by pricing the different machines.

I invite the farmers of northern Lenawee to call at my headquarters—Williamson's poultry house—in Tecumseh, and examine this machine before placing their orders.
GEO. C. POCKLINGTON,
Agent at Tecumseh.

In 1888 there were 76,534 men who showed their good sense, and demonstrated their belief that the McCormick machines are the best ones made, by buying one.

The McCormick steel mower is the best mower made. Your boy can handle it and your horses can easily draw it. It is well made and will give you satisfaction. The McCormick steel binder has proved itself a wonderful machine. The square tube frame, the steel sway bar, the springs in the platform and adjustable apron, the improved canvas and the new knotter (in some instances last year binding 40 acres without missing a single bundle) proves it all that a first-class binder could be.

Call on C. A. Slayton and examine the machine for yourself before buying, and remember he keeps the best twine in the market and gives bottom prices.

JESUS BEFORE PILATE.

LESSON X, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JUNE 9.

Text of the Lesson, Mark xv. 1-20—Commit Verses 6-8—Golden Text, John xix, 6—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

1. "And straightway in the morning." Here is the word "straightway" or "immediately" found so often (about forty times) in this Gospel; just the word for a faithful servant who delights to do quickly and thoroughly whatever there is to be done; but this time it is written concerning the servants of Satan that they also are quick to do his bidding. The disciples of Christ could not watch one hour with Him in His agony, but here are disciples of the devil eagerly watching and working all night; is there not something like it today when Christians complain if the service is a little over the appointed hour or hour and a half, but two or four hours is not too much to spend at an entertainment or evening party, and Satan thinks it not too much to keep his places for the destruction of soul and body open till midnight, or even all night.

2. "And Pilate asked Him, Art thou the King of the Jews?" Between this verse and the previous one read the confession of Judas, Matt. xxvii, 3-10; and for a more full account of all that passed between Pilate and the Jewish rulers and Jesus and also between Herod and Jesus read Luke xxiii, 4-16; John xviii, 28; xix, 15.

3-5. "Jesus answered nothing." In the Revised Version this statement is omitted from verse 3, and in verse 5 it reads, "Jesus no more answered anything." He had confessed privately to Pilate (John xviii, 33-37) and now publicly that He was a king, but he has now nothing more to say, and to the various accusations of the chief priests He answers nothing. Though there was a time when He charged His disciples that they should tell no man that He was the Christ (Matt. xvi, 20), He had now clearly stated that He was the Christ, the King of the Jews (chap. xiv, 61, 62, xv, 2), and He patiently awaited their disposal of Him, knowing well just what it would be, for He had often foretold it. (Chaps. viii, 31; ix, 31; x, 33, 34.)

6-8. "Now at that feast he released unto them one prisoner, whomsoever they desired." Matt. xxvii, 15, says that this was his custom; Lu. xxiii, 17, says, "of necessity he must release one unto them at the feast." Pilate had already said to Jesus that he had power to crucify and power to release.

9. "Pilate answered them, saying, Will ye that I release unto you the King of the Jews?" Matt. xxvii, 17, says that Pilate asked them whether he should release Barabbas, or Jesus who is called Christ? By consulting a Harmony of the Gospels it appears that Pilate interceded for Jesus and offered to set Him free no less than seven times on this eventful morning, this being the sixth time; thus putting the responsibility of His death upon the Jews. Peter says that Pilate was determined to let Him go (Acts iii, 13). Perhaps he named Barabbas thinking that if it was a choice between Jesus and such a notable criminal, they would surely choose Jesus, but he knew neither their murderous hearts nor the God of Love who was overruling all these things. (Acts iv, 27, 28.)

10. "He knew that the chief priests had delivered Him for envy." So Joseph was hated and envied by his brethren, and Moses was envied by Israel. (Gen. xxxvii, 8, 11; Ps. cvi, 16). "Wrath is cruel, and anger is outrageous, but who is able to stand before envy?" (Prov. xxvii, 4.)

11. "But the chief priests moved the people, that he should rather release Barabbas unto them." Matthew inserts here the account of the message of Pilate's wife, in which she speaks of her dream and urges her husband to have nothing to do with that just man. (Matt. xxvii, 19.)

12. "What will ye then that I shall do unto Him whom ye call the King of the Jews?" This is Pilate's seventh intercession on behalf of Jesus. Matthew states his question as, "What shall I do then with Jesus, who is called Christ?" Until this question is satisfactorily answered by every teacher and scholar, by every parent and child, there can be no true peace of mind.

13. "And they cried out again, Crucify Him." According to Jewish law, if Jesus was guilty of blasphemy, as they said, He should have been stoned to death (Lev. xxiv, 16); but in Ps. xxii, 16, it was written, "they pierced my hands and my feet," and in this cry that He should be crucified, they were unconsciously calling for a fulfillment of Scripture; and as it was written that not a bone of the passover lamb was to be broken (Ex. xii, 46), this also foretold that He should not be stoned to death. All Scripture must be fulfilled.

14. "Then Pilate said unto them, Why, what evil hath He done?" Isa. liii, 9, says: "He had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth." They could find no evil in Him, for there was none.

15. "And so Pilate, willing to content the people, released Barabbas unto them, and delivered Jesus, when he had scourged Him, to be crucified." Matt. xxvii, 24, 25, says that before Pilate did this he took water and washed his hands, saying, I am innocent of the blood of this just person, see ye to it. And all the people replied, His blood be on us and on our children. Pilate might also have added truthfully, "If I wash myself with snow water and make my hands never so clean, yet shalt thou plunge me in the ditch and mine own clothes shall abhor me" (Job ix, 30, 31), for no amount of hand washing could wash out his sin, and doubtless the Lord God would say to him, "Though thou wash thee with nitre, and take thee much sope, yet thine iniquity is marked before me" (Jer. ii, 22). What a wretched coward he was, what a miserable specimen of a man! Condemning the innocent, releasing the guilty, scourging and crucifying a just man, because he would rather please the people than do right. Consider this scene and these persons and say where you stand and with whom; judge by their conduct, Pilate pleasing people, Barabbas a murderer going free, the Jews all murderers, because full of hatred and envy gaining their end; Jesus, the holy, suffering, silent one, cheerfully doing the will of God. Consider Jesus being scourged; see that sacred form, perhaps never before exposed to human gaze since Mary tenderly cared for him as an infant in her arms; but see him now as blow after blow of the cruel thongs plow deep furrows on His back (Ps. cxxix, 3), and from the quivering flesh the blood pours forth at every blow; O, my Saviour, thou didst bear it all for me, and I have oft complained when asked to bear just a little of shame and scorn and suffering for Thy sake.

16-20. "And the soldiers led Him away, * * * led Him out to crucify Him." Between these two sentences comes all the history of Jesus in the hands of the soldiers in the common hall called Prætorium — the smiling, the mocking, the spitting, the crowning with thorns—but who can describe it? There is a pretense of justice at the Jewish council and in Pilate's judgment hall, but here there is none.

The Best Spring Medicine.

"In the spring of 1887 I was all run down. I would get up in the morning with so tired a feeling, and was so weak that I could hardly get around. I bought a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound, and before I had taken it a week I felt very much better. I can cheerfully recommend it to all who need a building up and strengthening medicine." MRS. B. A. DOW, Burlington, Vt.

Spring medicine means more now-a-days than it did ten years ago. The winter of 1888-89 has left the nerves all fagged out. The nerves must be strengthened, the blood purified, liver and bowels regulated. Paine's Celery Compound—the Spring medicine of to-day—does all this, as nothing else can. Prescribed by Physicians, Recommended by Druggists, Endorsed by Ministers, Guaranteed by the Manufacturers to be

The Wisconsin Treasury.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., May 25.—The coming of the state officers to Milwaukee opened anew the discussion of the subject of the condition of the state treasury. In places of public resort the extraordinary attitude of the administration was commented upon and generally in unfavorable terms. State Treasurer Harshaw again frankly admitted that he had no money to pay the appropriations made by the legislature, which he says amount to $386,000. He is silent on the subject as to how the state is to get along the second half of the fiscal year. Less than $500,000 will be collected in August, and as the extraordinary claims now due amount to $366,000 it will be seen that very little comparatively will be left. At least $400,000 will be needed for current expenses, so it is evident that there must be some pinching somewhere. The outcome may yet be a special tax.

Coal Trains in Collision.

PLAINVILLE, N. J., May 25.—A coal train on the Central railroad of New Jersey was run into at Richmond Crossing at 7:30 Saturday morning by another coal train of the Philadelphia and Reading road. Thirteen coal cars were piled up in a huge mass. Engineer Patrick Dugan, who remained at his post, was considerably bruised, as was also Brakeman Honnegar. The main tracks were blockaded with debris for several hours.

Suicide of an Express Agent.

LIMA, Ohio, May 25.—H. K. Gordon, local agent of the Adams express company, committed suicide by taking morphine Friday night, while the route agent was checking up his accounts. It is thought that Gordon was short in his accounts, but the amount has not yet been discovered.

Your medicine is a boon and blessing to man and more especially women. It renews the very life principle in the system and takes away the terrible scourge of woman and in the place of weakness brings strength. It is indeed doing wonders for the afflicted, and no one need to suffer from the terrible drain on the system arising from a disordered state of the kidneys, or from female weakness, that will try this, for it is sure. Hoping you will not consider this letter impertinent, I remain,

But signals from the repeller commanded them to stay by the Adamant as long as they could hold out, and they were obliged to content themselves with a hope that when night fell the other crab would be able to get in under the stern of the Adamant, and make the desired exchange.

But to the great discomforture of the syndicate's forces darkness had scarcely come on before four enormous electric lights blazed high up on the single lofty mast of the Adamant, lighting up the ocean for a mile on every side of the ship. It was of no more use for Crab C to try to get in now than in broad daylight; and all night the great guns roared, and the little crab maneuvered.

The next morning a heavy fog fell upon the sea, and the battle ship and Crab C were completely shut out of sight of each other. Now the cannon of the Adamant were silent, for the only result of firing would be to indicate to the crab the location of the British ship. The smoke signals of the towing crab could not be seen through the fog by her consorts, and she seemed to be incapable of making signals by sound. Therefore the commander of the Adamant thought it likely that until the fog rose the crab could not find his ship.

What that other crab intended to do could be, of course, on board the Adamant, only a surmise, but it was believed that she would bring with her a torpedo to be exploded under the British ship. That one crab should tow her away from possible aid until another should bring a torpedo to fasten to her stern post seemed a reasonable explanation of the action of the syndicate's vessels.

The officers of the Adamant little understood the resources and intentions of their opponents. Every vessel of the syndicate carried a magnetic indicator, which was designed to prevent collisions with iron vessels. This little instrument was placed at night and during fogs at the bow of the vessel, and a delicate arm of steel, which ordinarily pointed upward at a considerable angle, fell into a horizontal position when any large body of iron approached within a quarter of a mile; and, so falling, rang a small bell. Its point then turned toward the mass of iron.

Soon after the fog came on one of these indicators, properly protected from the attraction of the metal about it, was put into position on Crab C. Before very long it indicated the proximity of the Adamant; and, guided by its steel point, the crab moved quietly to the ironclad, attached itself to its stern post and allowed the happy crew of Crab K to depart eastward.

When the fog rose the glasses of the Adamant showed the approach of no crab, but it was observed in looking over the sea that the heavily swell ish which had the ship in tow appeared to have made some change in its back.

In the afternoon of that day a truce boat was sent from the repeller to the Adamant. It was allowed to come alongside, but when the British captain found that the syndicate merely renewed its demand for his surrender he waxed fiercely angry, and sent the boat back with the word that no further message need be sent to him unless it should be one complying with the conditions he had offered.

The syndicate now gave up the task of inducing the captain of the Adamant to surrender. Crab C was commanded to continue towing the great ship southward, and to keep her well away from the coast, in order to avoid danger to seaport towns and coasting vessels, while the repeller steamed away.

Week after week the Adamant moved southward, roaring away with her great guns whenever an American sail came within possible range, and surrounding herself with a circle of bursting bombs to let any crab know what it might expect if it attempted to come near. Blazing and thundering, stern foremost but stoutly she rode the waves, ready to show the world that she was an impregnable British battle ship, from which no enemy could snatch the royal colors which floated high above her.

It was during the first week of the involuntary cruise of the Adamant that the syndicate finished its preparations for what it hoped would be the decisive movement of its campaign. To do this a repeller and six crabs, all with extraordinary powers, had been fitted out with great care, and also with great rapidity, for the British government was working night and day to get its fleet of ironclads in readiness for a descent upon the American coast. Many of the British vessels were already well-prepared for ordinary naval warfare; but to resist crabs additional defenses were necessary. It was known that the Adamant had been captured, and consequently the manufacture of stern jackets had been abandoned, but it was believed that protection could be effectually given to rudders and propeller blades by a new method which the admiralty had adopted.

The repeller which was to take part in the syndicate's proposed movement had been a vessel of the United States navy which for a long time had been out of commission and undergoing a course of very slow and desultory repairs in a dock yard. She had always been considered the most unlucky craft in the service, and nearly every accident that could happen to a ship had happened to her. Years and years before, when she would set out upon a cruise, her officers and crew would receive the humorous sympathy of their friends, and wagers were frequently laid in regard to the different kinds of mishaps which might befall this unlucky vessel, which was then known as the Tallapoosa.

The syndicate did not particularly desire this vessel, but there was no other that could readily be made available for its purposes, and accordingly the Tallapoosa was purchased from the government and work immediately begun upon her. Her engines and hull were put into good condition, and outside of her was built another hull, composed of heavy steel armor plates and strongly braced by great transverse beams running through the ship.

Still outside of this was placed an improved system of spring armor, much stronger and more effective than any which had yet been constructed. This, with the armor plate, added nearly fifteen feet to the width of the vessel above water. All her superstructures were removed from her deck, which was covered by a curved steel roof, and under a bomb proof canopy at the bow were placed two guns capable of carrying the largest sized motor bombs. The Tallapoosa, thus transformed, was called Repeller No. 11.

The immense addition to her weight would of course interfere very much with the speed of the new repeller, but this was considered of little importance, as she would depend on her own engines only in time of action. She was now believed to possess more perfect defenses than any battle ship in the world.

Early on a misty morning Repeller No. 11, towed by four of the swiftest and most powerful crabs, and followed by two others, left a northern port of the United States, bound for the coast of Great Britain. Her course was a very northerly one, for the reason that the syndicate had planned work for her to do while on her way across the Atlantic.

The syndicate had now determined, without unnecessarily losing an hour, to plainly demonstrate the power of the instantaneous motor bomb. It had been intended to do this upon the Adamant, but as it had been found impossible to induce the captain of that vessel to evacuate his ship, the syndicate had declined to exhibit the efficiency of their new agent of destruction upon a disabled craft crowded with human beings.

This course had been highly prejudicial to the claims of the syndicate, for as Repeller No. 7 had made no use in the contest with the Adamant of the motor bombs with which she was said to be supplied, it was generally believed on both sides of the Atlantic that she carried no such bombs, and the conviction that the destruction at the Canadian port had been effected by means of mines continued as strong as it had ever been. To correct these false ideas was now the duty of Repeller No. 11.

For some time Great Britain had been steadily forwarding troops and munitions of war to Canada, without interruption from her enemy. Only once had the syndicate's vessels appeared above the banks of Newfoundland, and as the number of these peculiar craft must necessarily be small, it was not supposed that their line of operations would be extended very far north, and no danger from them was apprehended, provided the English vessels laid their courses well to the north.

Shortly before the sailing of Repeller No. 11, the syndicate had received news that one of the largest transatlantic mail steamers, loaded with troops, and with heavy cannon for Canadian fortifications, and accompanied by the Craglevin, one of the largest ironclads in the Royal navy, had started across the Atlantic. The first business of the repeller and her attendant crabs concerned these two vessels.

Owing to the power and speed of the crabs which towed her, Repeller No. 11 made excellent time; and on the morning of the third day out the two British vessels were sighted. Somewhat altering their course, the syndicate's vessels were soon within a few miles of the enemy.

The Craglevin was a magnificent war ship. She was not quite so large as the Adamant, and she was unprovided with a stern jacket or other defense of the kind. In sending her out the admiralty had designed her to defend the transport against the regular vessels of the United States navy; for although the nature of the contract with the syndicate was well understood in England, it was not supposed that the American government would long consent to allow their war vessels to remain entirely idle.

When the captain of the Craglevin perceived the approach of the repeller, he was much surprised, but he did not hesitate for a moment as to his course. He signaled to the transport, then about a mile to the north, to keep on the way while he steered to meet the enemy. It had been decided in British naval circles that the proper thing to do in regard to a repeller was to ram her as quickly as possible. These vessels were necessarily slow and unwieldy, and if a heavy ironclad could keep clear of crabs long enough to rush down upon one, there was every reason to believe that the "ball bouncer," as the repellers were called by British sailors, could be crushed in below the water line and sunk. So, full of courage and determination, the captain of the Craglevin bore down upon the repeller.

It is not necessary to enter into details of the ensuing action. Before the Craglevin was within half a mile of her enemy she was seized by two crabs, all of which had cast loose from the repeller, and in less than twenty minutes both of her screws were extracted and her rudder shattered. In the meantime two of the swiftest crabs had pursued the transport; and coming up with her, one of them had fastened to her rudder, without, however, making any attempt to injure it. When the captain of the steamer saw that one of the sea devils had him by the stern, while another was near by ready to attack him, he prudently stopped his engines and lay to, the crab keeping his ship's head to the sea.

The captain of the Craglevin was a very different man from the captain of the Adamant. He was quite as brave, but he was wiser and more prudent. He saw that the transport had been captured and forced to lay to; he saw that the repeller mounted two heavy guns at her bow, and whatever might be the character of those guns, there could be no reasonable doubt that they were sufficient to sink an ordinary mail steamer. His own vessel was entirely out of his control, and even if he chose to try his guns on the spring armor of the repeller, it would probably result in the repeller turning her fire upon the transport.

With a disabled ship, and the lives of so many men in his charge, the captain of the Craglevin saw that it would be wrong for him to attempt to fight, and he did not fire a gun. With as much calmness as the circumstances would permit he awaited the progress of events.

In a very short time a message came to him from Repeller No. 11, which stated that in two hours his ship would be destroyed by instantaneous motor bombs. Every opportunity, however, would be given for the transfer to the mail steamer of all the officers and men on board the Craglevin, together with such of their possessions as they could take with them in that time. When this had been done the transport would be allowed to proceed on her way.

To this demand nothing but acquiescence was possible. Whether or not there was such a thing as an instantaneous motor bomb the Craglevin's officers did not know; but they knew that if left to herself their ship would soon attend to her own sinking, for there was a terrible rent in her stern, owing to a pitch of the vessel, while one of the propeller shafts was being extracted.

Preparations for leaving the ship were therefore immediately begun. The crab was ordered to release the mail steamer, which, in obedience to signals from the Craglevin, steamed as near that vessel as safety would permit. Boats were lowered from both ships, and the work of transfer went on with great activity.

There was no lowering of flags on board the Craglevin, for the syndicate attached no importance to such outward signs and formalities. If the captain of the British ship chose to haul down his colors he could do so, but if he preferred to leave them still bravely floating above his vessel, he was equally welcome to do that.

When nearly every one had left the Craglevin, a boat was sent from the repeller, which lay near by, with a note requesting the captain and first officer of the British ship to come on board Repeller No. 11 and witness the method of discharging the instantaneous motor bomb, after which they would be put on board the transport. This invitation struck the captain of the Craglevin with surprise, but a little reflection showed him that it would be wise to accept it. In the first place, it was in the nature of a command, which in the presence of six crabs and a repeller it would be ridiculous to disobey, and, moreover, he was moved by a desire to know something about the syndicate's mysterious engine of destruction, if, indeed, such a thing really existed.

Accordingly, when all the others had left the ship, the captain of the Craglevin and his first officer came on board the repeller, curiously observing the spring armor over which they passed by means of a light gangboard with hand rail. They were received by the director at one of the hatches of the steel deck, which were now all open, and conducted by him to the bomb proof compartment in the bow. There was no reason why the nature of the repeller's defenses should not be known to the world nor adopted by other nations. They were intended as a protection against ordinary shot and shell, they would avail nothing against the instantaneous motor bomb.

The British officers were shown the motor bomb to be discharged, which, externally, was very much like an ordinary shell, except that it was nearly as long as the bore of the cannon; and the director stated that although, of course, the principle of the motor bomb was the syndicate's secret, it was highly desirable that its effects and its methods of operation should be generally known.

The repeller, accompanied by the mail steamer and all the crabs, now moved to about two miles to the leeward of the Craglevin, and lay to. The motor bomb was then placed in one of the great guns, while the scientific corps attended to the necessary calculations of distance, etc.

The director now turned to the British captain, who had been observing everything with the greatest interest, and, with a smile, asked him if he would like to commit harikari?

As this remark was somewhat enigmatical, the director went on to say that if it would be any gratification to the captain to destroy his vessel with his own hands, instead of allowing this to be done by an enemy, he was at liberty to do so. This offer was immediately accepted, for if his ship were really to be destroyed, the captain felt that he would like to do it himself.

THE BRITISH CAPTAIN DESTROYING HIS OWN SHIP.

When the calculations had been made and the indicator set, the captain was shown the button he must press, and stood waiting for the signal. He looked over the sea at the Craglevin, which had settled a little at the stern, and was rolling heavily, but she was still a magnificent battle ship, with the red cross of England floating over her. He could not help the thought that if this motor mystery should amount to nothing, there was no reason why the Craglevin should not be towed into port, and be made again the grand war ship that she had been.

Now the director gave the signal, and the captain with his eyes fixed upon the ship, touched the button. A quick shock ran through the repeller, and a black gray cloud, half a mile high, occupied the place of the British ship.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought untill we recive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggist may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

WRITING MACHINE CABINET and OFFICE DESK

For Remington, Hammond, and Grandall Type Writer.

The advantages of this Type writer and Office Desk over all other so-called Combination Cabinets, are:

First.—The ease and simplicity with which the desk is changed from a Library or Office Desk to a Type-writer Table. This change is effected by pushing the lid covering the machine back in the rear of cabinet—it being a roller top—removing it entirely from sight, thus overcoming the objectionable board and sounder in front of the operator. The movable top is perfectly flat, is beautifully covered, and forms a complete writing desk when the machine is not in use. The table on which the machine rests is so evenly balanced by our patent adjustments that it needs but a slight touch to bring the machine in position.

Second.—The advantages of the swinging table are: The table is so balanced near its center on patent malleable iron arms, that when the machine brought in place for use, it does not depend on ropes or hangers at rear of platform for support, but is held rigidly in place by its own weight, making it impossible for the machine to be tumbled down an incline in back of desk by the breaking of a rear support. The machine rests on patent slides which keeps the machine in place, and can be drawn out beyond the desk, well under the operator's hand.

Third.—The construction of the lid closing machine space makes it air tight, and the table having felt around its boarders thoroughly protects the machine from dust.

Fourth.—The foot rest and the construction of the table adjustments makes the desk as rigid as though the top was one solid board, which is a matter of great importance where a solid type-writing table is required. No operator can do good work on a shaky table.

Lastly.—The cabinet is a splendid piece of cabinet work. We manufacture them in Walnut, Antique Oak, Natural Oak, Natural Cherry, Cherry imitation, Mahogany and Ash.

Agents wanted to sell these cabinets, and where we have no agent we will sell direct from our factory.

On the 13th of June, the original Wild West exhibition and the famous Forepaugh show, both now united, will inaugurate their coming by appearing in one grandly-great and imposing street procession. Both exhibitions will start from the camping ground at about 10 30 in the morning. More than a hundred denizens of the plains will appear in this great frontier display and a large delegation of Genuine far West Indians, in charge of Dr. Carver and Pawnee Bill, the famous scouts and champion marksmen of the world. Conspicuous willbe the survivors of Custer's command, who will appear in the parade and afterwards take place in the realistic representation of Custer's last rally or battle of the Little Big Horn. There will also be seen veritable cowboys, lassoists celebrated scouts, Mexican vaqueros and

and a complete emigrant train, just as it appears crossing the distant prairies. The first wagon, it is believed, that ever crossed the Missi-sippi River and moreover 142 years old, is used in the parade. These venerable "prairie schooners," filled with the "traps" of emigrants, and containing their wives and little ones, drawn by oxen and mules, appear in parade, precisely as they could be seen not many years past, slowly moving over the prairies, "bound for Pike's Peak" or elsewhere away beyond the Missouri. The old which in times past carried the mail between the Black Hills and Denver, and which has been repeatedly the object of attack and pillage by savages and "road agents" on the distant frontier, will be put into the parade; a knight of the whip of the old Overland Mail Company will draw the lines over six horses, which will be attached to this historical relic of staging days on the frontier. Wild buffaloes, Indian ponies, antelopes, &c., will add to the picturesqueness of this realistic representation of graphically illustrating scenes in the nation's progress and the advance of civilization towards the land of the setting sun. This department of the parade is led by a genuine Cowboy Brass Band.

DEADWOOD STAGE COACH,

Effects of Modern Life.

Eminent authorities unanimously agree that the high pressure methods of modern life are rapidly making us a race of helpless invalids—subject to all manner of nervous affections, headaches, insanity, dizziness, neuralgia, backache, hysteria, nervous troubles of the heart, stomach, kidneys, brain, etc. Ladies and gentlemen who are thus afflicted, or who are compelled to keep late hours, do much mental or physical work, who worry or fret about business or domestic troubles, should remember that no other remedy in the world will so speedily cure these diseases, remove worry and the blues, induce tranquil sleep, relieve pain, or build up the brain and nervous systems, as Dr. Miles' great discovery, the Restorative Nervine. It contains no opium or morphine. Trial bottles free at Baker & Hall's Drug Store.

ADVICE TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

In nine cases out of ten, wives, who are annoyed with fretful husbands, have only themselves to blame. Middle aged men especially who are harrassed with the cares of business need something beside a bread and milk and tea diet. The family table should be furnished with choice meats well cooked, and no amount of good cooking will make a palatable, nourishing dish out of poor material. The best housekeepers in Tecumseh are learning this fact and patronize the West End Market, where they can always procure the choicest steaks, the juciest roasts, the tenderest fowls, the finest sausage and every thing else in the meat line, of superior quality. Call and be convinced.

BIRDSALL, GLENN & CO.

$100 REWARD. $100.

The readers of the HERALD will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength, by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

The funeral services were held at Ann Arbor Monday morning and the remains were brot here Monday afternoon and placed in the Catholic cemetery. Mrs. Eagan leaves two sons and two daughters to mourn her loss.

Bob Codling went to Battle Creek Monday night to play ball with the Horton club.

Mary O. Keyes, only daughter of the late Danforth Keyes died at her mother's home in Clinton, on Tuesday, the 11th inst., aged 34 years. Her last illness was of brief duration, covering the space of only six days, but during that short time she endured weeks of suffering. She was first attacked with a congestive chill which was followed by double pneumonia, complicated with peritonitis and heart trouble. She received the best of care and medical attention, but it was of no avail. The attack was foredoomed from the outset to a fatal termination. Shewas conscious to the end and endured her sufferings without a murmur, and when the lamp of life went out she looked like one who had dropped into a gentle sleep.

The funeral was attended at the family home on Friday, June 14th, at two o'clock, P. M. Rev. J. Phelps, of Tecumseh officiating. Many lovely floral tributes were presented by sympathizing friends and a large gathering assembled to pay their last tribute of respect and homage to Mary's memory. Her remains were consigned to the tomb exactly five months after her father's burial, on the same day of the month, and at the same hour. It was the third funeral in that household within six months. Verily, the old families of Clinton are breaking up.

Mary was a quiet unassuming girl, not given to the display of fashion or the frivolities of society. Her life was bound up in home, and her best days were spent in ministering to the comfort of an invalid mother and an aged father. To the surviving brother she was the kindest of sisters; to the father in his life, she was a ministering angel of good; to the poor invalid mother she was a daily benediction. No one on earth can fill the daughter's place in that mother's home and heart. Even now, Mary's spirit may be beckoning to her mother from over the river, and calling her to that

"Sinless, stirless rest—
That change which never changes."

DEATH OF JOSEPH S. KIES.

In the spring of 1829 Capt. Alpheus Kies, with his family, left his home in Cayuga County in the state of New York to seek his fortune in the wilds of Michigan. The journey was made via the Erie Canal to Buffalo and thence to Detroit by lake. They embarked on the William Penn, which boat became disabled after two days, and put in at Dunkirk. There they took passage on the steamer Enterprise, and arrived in Detroit six days later. Loading their effects on a lumber wagon, they started overland to their destination and upon reaching the limits of Clinton they found one lone shanty near the site of the present village. Capt. Kies took up a tract of government land 240 acres in extent, which embraced the greater portion of the present village corporation. The settlement was then known as Oak Plains. Mr. Kies erected the first house which was a log structure, and named the town Clinton, in honor of Gov. Clinton of New York.

Joseph S. was then a bright boy nine years old in July of that year. He passed his boyhood years beneath the roof of his father's humble cottage, obtaining the best education that the limited facilities of the district schools then afforded. He gave evidence, even before attaining his majority, of superior energy and capabilities. After starting in business for himself he carried on a farm and conducted a nursery for some years. From early manhood he took a leading position in the home of his adoption. He was foremost in educational projects and public matters; for many years he was an honored member of the Masonic Fraternity; he had long been a communicant of the Episcopal Church. He served six years as supervisor of his township, three of them before Clinton was separated from Tecumseh, and also held many other offices of public trust. His real estate holdings increased in number and value as he advanced in years, until he became one of the largest land holders in that vicinity. In 1867 he inaugurated the Clinton Woolen Mill enterprise, and it was chiefly due to his indomitable energy and pluck that this factory was built and the business placed upon a paying basis.

Mr. Kies was chosen President of the company at its inception and held the practical supervision of its affairs for nearly twenty years. During this period the mill was never closed except for temporary repairs. The institution has long been regarded as one of the most flourishing woolen industries in the West. In 1886 he relinquished the Presidency of the company, but continued as director and one of the active managers until his death. It can truthfully be said that to Joseph S. Kies, more than to all other men, is due the marked and continued success of this business enterprise.

On the 28th, of Sept., 1846 he was united in marriage at Clinton with Frances E. Parks, who survives him. Five children blessed this union, three of whom are living. George A. and Will J. Clothiers of Elkhart Ind., and Kate, the wife of C. F. Field, proprietor of the Tecumseh News. Two have gone before, James A. who died in 1863 and Mary Ida, the wife of Dr. Samuel Chandler of Saline, who departed this life a few months ago. On Saturday morning last Mr. Kies arose at the usual hour and was seized with an attack of heart trouble. A messenger was sent for help, but before a physician or even a neighbor arrived, his spirit had taken its flight.

Seldom, if ever, has Clinton witnessed a more imposing funeral than was held Monday afternoon last, when his neighbors and friends of a lifetime gathered at his residence to convey his remains to the grave. A brief service was recited from the Episcopal Church ritual by Rev. J. Phelps, of Tecumseh. The choir consisted of Mrs. Ed Van DeMark, Mrs. C. S. Burroughs, Misses Laura Clark and Nellie Kishpaugh, Ed Rose and A. F. Kishpaugh. The procession and services at the grave were in charge of the Masonic Fraternity. Over one-hundred brethren, clad in proper emblems of mourning, led the funeral cortege to the cemetery, both the Tecumseh and Manchester Lodges being largely represented in the ranks. A delegation of six from Clinton lodge officiated as pall bearers—Ed Van De Mark, A. B. Van DeMark, John Hause Jr., C. C. Rowland, F. D. Lancaster and Geo Fisher. The usual Masonic burial service was rehearsed at the grave by the master of Clinton lodge, the choir assisting. The business houses of the village were closed, and it seemed as though the entire town had gathered at the house of mourning.

In the death of Joseph S. Kies, Clinton has sustained a loss which time alone can heal. For sixty years that village has been his home. He has grown with its growth and strengthened with its strength. He has seen it develop from the one log cabin which his father built in the wilderness, into a beautiful thriving village, and he himself has been a leader in every step of that development. He typified the hardy western pioneer, who overrides all obstacles and conquers success. He was outspoken and independent in his opinions, a faithful friend and an honorable foe. In all the relations of life he filled the full stature of a vigorous manhood. As a husband and father, as a business leader, as a Masonic brother, as a friend and neighbor, no man in Clinton, for the past half century, has filled a larger niche in the esteem of his fellow citizens. His name will be canonized as one of the patron saints of our sister village.

RIDGEWAY RAMBLES.

Road district No. 1 has purchased one of the Fleming road machines sold by C. W. Pelham, agent, of Woodstock.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, will hold a public meeting at the church Sunday eve., June 16. An interesting program is being prepared and a cordial invitation is extended to all.

A meeting of the stockholders of the Ridgeway and Macon telegraph company was held Monday evening. A board of directors was elected to fill vacancy, consisting of D. T. Hall, Frank Davidson, R. H. Nelson, Geo. Osgood, Wm. Britton and Wm. Osgood. It will be the duty of the board to meet as soon as possible, to elect officers from their number and assume control of the line as the constitution and by-laws direct. If this is done promptly the line will no doubt be put in better shape and kept in order.

This is the last week of school which closes the most successful year of school work since the new building was constructed. On Wednesday evening, of next week, the school will give a public entertainment at the hall, consisting of recitations, declamations, dialogues, history, prophesy and an original poem, which will no doubt form a very interesting part of the program. The musical part is being arranged by Miss Barlow and Miss Grayson, who will also assist in the entertainment, and will of course prove a valuable addition to the program. For the pur ose of increasing the chart fund, an admission fee will be charged as follows: Adult, single ticket, 15cts.; under 12 years, 10cts.; family, 50 cts.

Sunday being Children's Day, Rev. J. A. Lowry preached a discourse appropriate to the occasion at the morning service. In the evening the Sabbath school carried out an exercise that eclipsed all former efforts. At half past seven the classes marched to the audience room, led by the Superintendent, and were seated in the front part of the church. The exercises began with an organ voluntary by Miss Belle Barlow, followed by prayer by the Pastor; responsive reading by the Superintendent and school; recitations and singing by members of the school. Miss Grayson conducted the singing by the school and at the close of the exercises gave a vocal solo, "Eternal Rest."

The exercises were a success throughout. "Six steps to the throne" was was the topic of the exercise. In the center of the rostrum was erected a throne decorated with evergreens, ferns, moss, and flowers, which presented a beautiful design. On each step leading to the throne was a word designating the step to be taken to reach the throne. On the back of the seat of the throne was a cross and the words "True Success." At each side of the throne was a pyramid of flowers and arbor vitae; at the right was a booth of house plants and flowers, also a pyramid of flowers and the motto, "Children's Day." At the left was a beautiful window garden and pyramid of evergreens, bouquets; in the background were the Sabbath school banners. The attendance was very large, and the collection which amounted to nearly $20.00, bears evidence that the exercises were appreciated.

NORTH EAST FRANKLIN.

Cora Bunting was home from Cambridge over Sunday.

The schools in Dist. No. 3 and the "Excelsior" close on Friday of this week.

Gracie DePuy was treated to a surprise party on Saturday.

Sabbath school every Sunday afternoon at the school house in the Smalley district.

Dr. Tripp was suddenly taken very ill one day last week and for some time was in great danger. Dr. North was summoned by telegraph, and succeeded in relieving him.

Road work was in progress last week and the humpy condition of the roads could only be compared to the disorder of the houses in house cleaning time.

Owing to the rain, but few assembled at L. E. Taylor's on the evening of June 1st. The Lyceum will meet June 15th, same place. It is hoped that the weather may be more propitious at that time.

100 Ladies Wanted,

And 100 men to call on any druggist for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicine, the great root and herb remedy, discovered by Dr. Silas Lane while in the Rocky Mountains. For diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys it is a positive cure. For constipation and clearing up the complexion it does wonders. Children like it. Everyone praises it. Large-size package, 50 cents. At all druggists'.

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

Gov. Beaver Responds

Pennsylvania's Executive Visits the Wreck at Johnstown.

THE STATE COMES TO THE RESCUE.

One Million Dollars To Be Supplied, Wealthy Citizens Taking the Risk of Its Appropriation by the Legislature.

The Governor to Apply Outside Funds in His Hands to the Relief of the Destitute—The Health Bulletin Tells a Cheering Story—A Chief of Police Sat Upon—Big Decrease in Estimates of Dead—Nearly $3,000,000 in Contributions—A Prohibition Speaker Nearly Mobbed in Pittsburg—Frank Hatton's Thrilling Story—Elemental Havoc in Indiana and New York.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 10.—Governor Beaver, so much inquired for during the last week, came here yesterday, looked at the wreck with weeping eyes, conferred for an hour and a half with William Flinn, James B. Scott, William McCreery, Gen. Hastings, and others who have borne the burden of the work of rescue and relief, and pledged $1,000,000 from the state treasury. There will be no extra session of the legislature. A state commission, with the governor at its head, will take control of the relief work on Wednesday.

Wealthy Citizens Stand Good for It.

It was proposed that the state furnish $1,000,000 to Gen. Beaver for immediate use in clearing up and restoring Johnstown. In order to make the state whole 200 citizens of Pittsburg, Philadelphia and other portions of it will become individually responsible until the legislature meets and makes appropriations that will relieve them. This plan was unanimously agreed to. It was also arranged that on Wednesday morning Gen. Hastings, acting for Governor Beaver, should take charge of the work of policing the valley and cleaning it up, including Johnstown and the surrounding boroughs. Governor Beaver left at 7 o'clock last evening.

The Governor Talks.

In an interview Governor Beaver said that he had been over the entire flooded district, and found the supply depots well filled, but they must soon be replenished. "I found the streams filled with debris and accumulated drift in which there is a possibility of human bodies being imbedded with a probability that if allowed to remain they will endanger public health, leaving a impressed in my mind that the public powers of the state must be exercised to restore things to their normal condition.

Will Reserve Contributions for the Needy.

"The funds which have come into my hands in such large amounts and from so many quarters outside of the state, and which have been imposed upon me as a sacred trust, will be expended wholly and absolutely for the benefit of the sufferers. No part of it will be expended on work which is legitimately the domain of the state under its police powers. This I wish to emphasize so that all contributors to the fund may be assured that their money will be justifiably and economically expended for the benefit of sufferers exclusively and not on work which should and will be undertaken by the state or municipal authorities."

A CHEERING HEALTH REPORT.

No Epidemic of Any Kind at Johnstown and No Prospect of It.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 10.—The state board of health is cheerfully handing out the following bulletin: "The general condition of health in Johnstown and vicinity is excellent. No epidemic disease of any kind prevails, nor is it expected that any will arise. The whole region has been divided into convenient districts and each placed under a competent sanitarian. The state board of health is prepared to meet all emergencies as they arise. The air is wholesome and the drinking water is generally pure. If the good people of the devastated district will go on as they have so nobly done during the past week in their efforts to clear up the wreckage, good health will certainly be maintained."

Dr. Joseph N. Dickson, in charge of the Bedford street hospital, and Dr. T. L. Hazard, of Allegheny, deny emphatically that there is a single case of diphtheria in Johnstown or any of its suburbs. They say there is a good deal of follicular sore throat, but that is rarely fatal, and is not contagious. It is something like quinsy, but a milder disease.

Religious services were held at several different places throughout the city yesterday, and were largely attended.

A CONFLICT OF AUTHORITY.

Johnstown's Chief of Police Gets a Setting Down—Thrifty Laborers.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 10.—Horace Mann, a private detective, came up from Philadelphia yesterday with seven of his men in response to a request of Gen. Hastings. Counterfeit policemen and deputy sheriffs, in the full panoply of a tin star and a club, were as easy to find as an old tin can. A pair of shears and a piece of stair banister was all that was required, and they could not be told from the genuine.

The Chief Taken Down a Peg.

Chairman Scott and Gen. Hastings issued a supply of cards to Chief of Police Hart to be given to all officers, and told him all without them would be arrested. The chief put them in his pocket, and four of his men who could not show cards were arrested by Mann's men. Chief Hart got angry and ordered his men to shoot anybody who interfered with them. He was thereupon arrested himself, taken before Chairman Scott, and taught the limits of his authority.

The Workmen Making It Pay.

Mann's men found six barrels of whisky and $500 worth of silverware hidden in some of the workmen's tents. They staved in the heads of the whisky barrels, poured it out, and confiscated the silverware.

The Work at the Bridge.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 10.—Work in clearing away the debris goes right along, but it is slow, especially at the bridge jam. Here the workmen are using dynamite, but it has not made much of an impression. Five bodies were recovered there Saturday. A corps of government engineers arrived Saturday with pontoons with which they immediately proceeded to put two bridges across the river, and they were in position before night.

The Waters Giving Up the Dead.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 10.—The waters began to give up their dead yesterday, the ninth since the flood. Fifty odd bodies were recovered here, most of them floating in the water. Seven of them were dragged out of the raft above the bridge. On the body of Christopher Kempler, an undertaker, was found $3,100. The body of Miss Bessie Bryan, of Philadelphia, was dug up yesterday and positively identified. It had been buried among the unknown.

Moral of It Lies in Its Application.

GREENSBURG, Pa., June 10.—The jury impaneled by the coroner of Westmoreland county to inquire into the cause of the death of the 218 persons whose bodies were picked up at Nineveh, yesterday rendered a verdict that each of them became to his death by violence due to the flood caused by the breaking of the dam of the South Fork reservoir, and as well the aforesaid coroner as the jurors aforesaid do certify under their oaths, that the said deceased died of violence caused by the action of the flood, or there is such strong suspicion of such violence or other unlawful acts as to make an inquest necessary."

Reducing the Death Estimate.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 10.—The work of enrolling the living in order to get at the number of dead has progressed steadily during the past four or five days. The number enrolled up to last evening is 21,000, and now the conservative people have reduced their estimates of dead to from 3,500 to 4,000, while those who a week ago held that 10,000 lost their lives are figuring on half that number. Fifty-eight bodies were found yesterday in the ruins at Kernville and in Stony creek.

AN ORATOR FROM KANSAS.

He Comes Near Being Mobbed for Talking Too Vigorously.

PITTSBURG, June 10.—While addressing a temperance meeting, under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance union, in this city last night, Rev. James Madden, a Prohibition orator from Kansas, said:

"I was in Johnstown when the flood occurred, but managed through my own energy and perseverence to escape the flood. Those who had not done so left a warning six hours old go unheeded, waited, were drowned, and went to hell."

A Murmur of Indignation.

The murmur that instantly arose from the audience fairly shook the building. William Moffatt and Daniel Donahue, who had both lost relatives in the disaster, arose together and denounced the speaker's consignment of the sufferers as horrible. A large part of the audience left the room, and on arriving on the street an indignation meeting was held.

The Mob Spirit, of Course.

Some of the more hot-headed suggested that a committee be appointed to return upstairs for Mr. Madden, and that he be treated to the indignation of a mob. Before this suggestion was put into effect several members of the union arrived on the scene, deprecated the conduct of Madden, and pleaded that for their sake no violence be done him. The crowd finally but sullenly consented to let the Rev. Madden go scot free.

He Only Meant the Rum-Sellers.

After a lapse of time he emerged from the hall and was approached by Mr. Donahue, who demanded an explanation of his strange remarks. Mr. Madden said that if given time he would have cleared up matters, and that his remarks were only applicable to rumsellers.

Repudiated by the Union.

It is but just to the ladies who comprise the union to say that the Rev. Madden's remarks present them clearly. Mrs. Jones called ahead of the ladies connected with the union to rise and show their disapproval of the outrageous sentiment, which they did to a woman. A resolution was presented showing the hearty sympathy of the union for the Johnstown sufferers and its willingness to aid them in any way possible. The resolution drew forth the applause of the crowd and was unanimously adopted.

FRANK HATTON'S NARROW ESCAPE.

He Tells How Near a Passenger Train Came to Destruction.

WASHINGTON CITY, June 10.—Frank Hatton, editor of The Washington Post, who was one of the passengers on the Chicago limited train at Johnstown, contributes to The Post a graphic description of the incident of his escape from death. When the limited pulled into Johnstown it was found that the place was flooded. Only a few minutes were wasted there. Then the train moved cautiously on. Editor Hatton then proceeds:

Perilous Delay.

Mineral Point was passed. From this spot on the speed of the train decreased. The fury of the torrent, the roar of the waters, seemed to intimidate the two great iron monsters that were dragging the train. Faces blanched with fear pressed against the windows of the car. As great bodies of water rolled down the gorges and over the track, covering the cars with spray, terrified passengers would jump back, expecting the cars to be overturned.

The Train Stops.

The speed of the train gradually decreased, and then, as if the engines had given up in despair, the train stopped. The passengers alighted to ascertain our location. It was found that we were at the south end of the bridge which spanned the Conemaugh at the little town of South Fork, and at the point where the South and North Forks come together, and near a telegraph tower. But no orders came to move forward.

The Flood from the Forks.

The water came down the two forks with terrible force, telling of the ruin that had been wrought above. Portions of bridges, outhouses, logs, pieces of furniture and all kinds of debris went tearing by and on down in the rapidly-swelling river. Ten, fifteen, twenty minutes passed, and there was no movement of the train. The rain came down from the heavens above, while the floods of the two forks rolled and dashed as they joined together, making one mighty and angry river. People from the town of South Fork crossed the bridge and mixed with the passengers. Until then the latter did not know of the reservoir two miles above them which was getting ready to let loose the vast body of water which it held within its confines.

A Timely Suggestion.

It needed but a glance at the topography of the country to show that should the reservoir, which was described as three miles long, one and a half miles wide and sixty feet deep, empty its mountain of water down the sides of the gorge through which South Fork flowed, the limited express would be destroyed and all on board swept into eternity. Mr. Hatton suggested that the train be moved across the bridge. The conductor at first said that he had orders to stay where he was, but he finally consented to take the train across.

Safe by a Narrow Margin.

"About fifteen minutes after the limited had reached the north side," says Mr. Hatton, "the engine of the freight train, which had remained on the south side, gave a fierce shriek and the train started for the bridge. Intuitively everybody knew the dam had broken and the water was coming. The inhabitants, shrieking and crying, ran for the mountain side. The two engines on the limited blew their whistles and started with the train up the track, followed by the freight train.

The Rush of the Destroyer.

"The writer was in the rear of the next to the last car on the limited. The roar of the waters was almost deafening. In less time than it has taken to write this paragraph it had struck the houses nearest the bridge, and they were lifted high into the air and tumbled over into the surging stream. The engine of the escaping freight train, which had given the alarm, had hardly reached the north side when the bridge went down and the freight cars were borne off by the rushing waters. As the passenger train fled up the track the back-water up the north branch carried by it articles of furniture from the houses which a few seconds before were standing by the side of the train.

The Danger Past.

"There was great excitement among the passengers on the train, but it was soon discovered that the danger was past, and a 'Thank God we are safe,' went up from the hearts and lips of all on board. The limited train lay at Wilmore all night and until late Saturday afternoon, when it proceeded slowly east, reaching Altoona about 7 o'clock that evening."

Total Contributions Raised.

NEW YORK, June 10.—An approximate estimate of the contributions of money to the flood relief fund up to Saturday night shows a total of $2,650,000. Philadelphia leads the list with $680,000; New York comes next with $568,000; Pittsburg gives $500,000; Chicago, $110,000, and Boston and Harrisburg $100,000 each. No doubt there have been contributions enough to raise the total to near $3,000,000.

Situation at Bellefonte.

BELLEFONTE, Pa., June 10.—There is much suffering in some parts of this county. Several thousand dollars have been contributed for the aid of the sufferers, together with a large quantity of provisions and clothing. The points which suffered the most are Millheim, Coburn and the vicinity in Penn's valley, Central City, and along Fishing creek in Nittany valley, where every one is destitute.

A Hole Full of Corpses.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 10.—In a hole on the site of the Hurlbut house forty-seven bodies supposed to be those of guests, have been discovered.

THE RELENTLESS ELEMENTS.

Oswego, N. Y., Visited by a Storm Which Works Great Ruin.

OSWEGO, N. Y., June 10.—The worst storm of rain and hail experienced here in many years passed over this section of the state about 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon. The people were just gathering at a mass-meeting when the sky suddenly became black and two immense clouds seemed to rise up out of the lake and bear down upon the city. The people abandoned the meeting, and rushed for their homes. As the clouds approached the city they were frightful in appearance. They passed over the city three minutes apart and the sun shone brightly between them. The thermometer fell from 66 to 56. The hail came with terrific force, the stones being all shape[illegible]

Some Immense Hail Stones.

The weather observer picked up one at the signal office that measured 1¾ inches long and ⅞ of an inch thick. Great damage was done to strawberries and tobacco crops, and in many fields they were utterly ruined. The second cloud sent down sheets of rain. The streets were filled from gutter to gutter, and many cellars were flooded. The rainfall in twenty minutes was 1.4 inches, the heaviest in that time ever recorded here.

THE DEVASTATING WATERS.

Immense Damage Done in Indiana by Heavy Rains.

INDIANAPOLIS, June 10.—Advices from all parts of the state indicate great damage from the rains of the past week, due to the growing crops and to property situated along the water courses. The river here is out of its banks and has done a great deal of damage to fencing all along its course. Fields of corn, wheat and oats have been entirely washed out and others have been greatly damaged along the Sangamon river. In White and other counties the bottoms are all covered with water, and hundreds of acres of growing crops are submerged.

A Refuge in the Hills.

People have all fled to the highlands for safety. Clay county has suffered greatly, many of the farm-houses being partly under water. Several of the mines are flooded, and a large section of the Chicago and Eastern Illinois railroad is washed out. A gentleman who returned yesterday from the Ohio river reports that the stream is very high and is rising rapidly, and that a large amount of the wreckage from Johnstown is being brought down.

THE VILLAGE BLACKSMITH.

Under a spreading chestnut tree
The village blacksmith stands,
And in a brimming basin he
Would wash his brawny hands;
But something else than water clean
His sooty palm demands.

Week in, week out, from morn till night,
He might have rubbed, I trow,
Had I not given him a cake
Of IVORY SOAP, when, lo!
Full soon those honest hands of his
Were spotless as the snow.

And when the soap escaped his grasp,
With wonder he did note
That on the water's surface dark
The cleansing bar did float,
As swims upon a turbid lake
A pearl white fairy boat.

"Thanks, thanks," said he, "my worthy friend,
For this which thou hast brought;
No village blacksmith should forget
The facts this Ivory Soap has taught;
For hands like mine it is the best
That can be found or bought."

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Lightning danced in at the dining room window of a Detroit boarding house, alighted on a plate on the table, bored a hole through both of them and then dropped through the floor beneath into the cellar. And yet not one of the people who were sitting at that self same table at the time were harmed, albeit they may have been a trifle surprised.

Ishpeming people buy water of peddlers at 5 cents per gallon, because the public supply contains too great a variety of foreign matter to make it palatable.

Michigan towns have been vying with each other, apparently, to see how low they could buy potatoes this spring. Up to this date Big Rapids seems to have taken the gingerbread, as her dealers have been buying an abundance of tubers at 5 cents per bushel.

Lake Linden's man milliner has emigrated to Marquette, leaving the Linden ladies disconsolate.

Mosherville has a 200-pound chimney sweep who is said to be as agile as a cat, turning somersaults from the tops of chimneys to the roofs below, with a voice that can be heard further than a mountain lion's, and, when he gets right down to business, can make as high as $5 per day. The story is a good one, anyway.

Jackson folks have another sensation. But it's not a murder case this time—only just the selling of diseased meat by a local market. This, however, is not particularly pleasant news for the average city boarder.

The local committee having in charge the entertainment of the Michigan Press association which meets at Muskegon in June, are flattening upon lots of strawberries with which to astonish the visitors. Michigan Legislature.

LANSING, Mich., May 29.—The lower house yesterday killed the bill to increase the specific tax of the Michigan railroads from 2 and 3 per cent. to 3 and 4 per cent. of their gross earnings. The house passed a bill providing that any person owning mortgaged land may retain out of the interest due on the mortgage such a proportion of the taxes he has paid on the land as the amount of the mortgage bears to the assessed valuation of the land; also the bill appropriating $10,000 to complete the decorations of the capitol building. The senate passed bills exempting the shares and mortgages of building and loan associations from all taxation, and requiring all passenger and mixed railroad trains to use air-brakes.

LANSING, Mich., May 30.—The legislature yesterday voted to adjourn over to Monday in honor of Decoration Day. The senate passed the high license bill fixing the uniform retail tax on beer and whisky at $500, for wholesaling spirituous liquors $500, for manufacturing spirituous liquors $1,000, and for manufacturing beer $65. The senate struck out the stringent provision relating to druggists and inserted in its place the valid portion of the old law. The senate passed the house bill appropriating $66,000 for the state public school at Coldwater.

THE CRONIN MYSTERY.

How It Came That the Doctor Was Ordered Removed.

INDIANAPOLIS, June 1.—The evening paper prints a remarkable interview in connection with the Cronin mystery. It was written by an Irish Nationalist and sent to the office through a second party, who refused to give the name of the other. It contains a good deal of matter not heretofore made public and shows familiarity with the Clan-na-Gael which stamps it as genuine. The writer says that the Clan-na-Gael as an organization is not responsible for Cronin's death, but some of its members are. He dates the conspiracy against Cronin as far back as 1884, refers to Alexander Sullivan as a member of the "triangle," and relates the following interesting circumstances:

Arrested on British Soil.

"Twenty-three men had been sent to England to use physical force. Each of these men used an assumed name and was given a certain address to call at in London. While they were on the sea their names, description and the London address of each was furnished the Scotland yard detectives, and twenty of the men were arrested the moment they stepped on British soil. Dynamite was found in their possession, and they are either dead or serving long terms of imprisonment. Three men, however, who were sent to England did not land at the point intended. They did not use the names given them, neither did they call at the London address.

SANITARY SCIENCE.

THE HEALTH CONVENTION HELD IN TECUMSEH LAST WEEK THURSDAY AND FRIDAY.

Many Instructive Papers Presented—A Full Synopsis of the Proceedings—The Visitors in Attendance, Etc.

Whether the convention held last Thursday and Friday in Tecumseh will tend to improve the sanitary condition of the village remains to be seen. Certain it is many valuable suggestions were made, which could be followed to great advantage to the community at large. The attendance at the two days sessions was good, and especially so Thursday evening. The papers read were exceedingly interesting and were interspersed with vocal and instrumental music by the best home talent, including vocal solos by Miss Grayson, and Miss Woodward, quartettes by J. S. Strong, H. W. Conkling, Mrs. Bidwell and Mrs. Morley, cornet solos by Prof. Skinner, and violin solos by Miss Hayden.

Among the visiting physicians were Doctors Baker, Segur, and Todd, of Adrian; Loree and Nelson, Ridgeway; White and Tuttle, Clinton; Jones, and Vaughan, Springville; Perkins, Tipton; Jones, and Palmer, Brooklyn; Taylor, Manchester, Haines, Dundee; and the following members of the state board of health: Prof. H. F. Lyster, of Detroit; Prof. Delos Fall, of Albion, Dr. H. B. Baker, and A. Arnold Clark of Lansing

The reception tendered Gov. Cyrus G. Luce and wife at the residence of Dr. Jenkins Thursday evening was largely attended, and proved a pleasant social event.

The first session of the convention was called to order Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock by President Geo. Howell, M.D. After prayer by Rev. J. S. Joslyn and a vocal solo by Miss Grayson, Village President George Heesen welcomed the visiting medical fraternity and scientists in a few well chosen remarks. The response was made by Prof. H. F. Lyster, M.D., a member of the state board of health, who stated the object of the convention was in coming together to discuss the laws of health and the improvement of the condition of the living.

Dr. Lemon Barnes addressed the convention on "The Duty of Preventing Diseases," stating that sanitary reform would undoubtedly reduce the death rate one-half. The average man thinks more of making money than he does of sanitary science and the average woman sacrifices the health of her daughter to the demands of fashion. Observance of the laws of health has a beneficial influence on the mind, and morality suffers from disease. Diet has much to do with the health. Pork is a great factor in producing consumption. The Jews are singularly exempt from consumption and they have a holy horror of pork. Typhoid fever germs must be taken in the alimentary canal, taking it into the lungs does not produce it generally. Diphtheria is highly infectious in the air, and damp cellars and sewers are a great factor in producing it. Cuban smugglers are blamed for the yellow fever epidemic in Florida. The most efficient means of stamping out the disease would be to disinfect its winter home thoroughly.

Dr. V. A. Baker, of Adrian, discussed the paper briefly—Sleeping rooms should be well ventillated. People must avoid drugging with cathartics, narcotics, alcohol, etc. They take too much medicine, especially patent nostrums. The practice of self prescribing is working incalculable harm.

"Sewerage and Drainage in Tecumseh" was ably discussed in a paper by Geo. S. Tiffany.

He thought there was an abundant water supply for a sewerage system in Tecumseh. The great gravel bed underneath the village was sufficient. The ground 20 feet around privies and cesspools is polluted, and the cause of much sickness and death is the foul air coming in the cellar and up through the floor. A thorough sewer system could not be afforded in Tecumseh, but why not have it in a section of it. Nature has done a splendid work in the drainage of Tecumseh. There is a gentle fall from the west to Evans creek on the east. The soil is most favorable for the health of Tecumseh.

The discussion was led by Dr. Lyster of Detroit. The average depth of clay before getting to the gravel bed is from 4 to 8 feet. Factors are here which are liable to breed disease. Tecumseh is an old town. The cesspools and vaults draining down to this gravel bed constitutes as bad state of things as could exist. If you had 50 feet of clay it is possible it would not be contaminated so soon. Wells should be given up and especially so that abomination—the open well. The dry earth system of closets is the only sensible one for Tecumseh, where the water supply is short. It would allow you to longer use your wells. Rain water filtered is the best drinking water, or boil your well water to purify it.

THURSDAY EVENING.

The opera house was crowded at the evening session, and it proved an important and interesting one. Gov. C. G. Luce was first on the program and addressed the audience on "The Interest of the State in the Health of the citizen."

I have on several occasions attempted to respond for the state of Michigan, and the sentiment has been expressed and entered foremost in such a manner as to associate with it the material and resources in the commonwealth. When we think of the state in this connection the mind reaches out to the cultivated fields, the lakes, the rivers and the finny tribes that inhabit them, and to the commerce, the beautiful towns and cities that are scattered all over this fair land, and to the factories and shops. And while the subject now presented refers more specially to the state in another meaning, the wealth of the citizen is related to all of this. The value is increased by the robust health enjoyed by the citizen. It requires no argument to convince the thinking man that the state is interested in the getting of property, and while it may jar upon the feelings of the sensitive, yet is true, that for the purpose of securing the desired results in this respect every human being in bodily health has a cash value. They are not put into the market as slaves, but they are wealth producers. The man of strong healthy mind is of more benefit to society than one of a weak, sluggish mind. The state suffers a loss in the death of a citizen, and it is under a moral as well as financial obligation to protect the life of the citizen that is healthy. Our statutes are full of enactments providing for the drainage of swamp lands. We have enacted laws to establish boards of health, both state and local. We have laws enough, but the trouble that confronts us is to secure their enforcement.

C. F. Field presented a paper on "The Public Press and the Public Health." He said, there is no phase of modern life that the press does not influence. True it steps in where angels fear to tread, but is nevertheless the greatest teacher of the age. The proceedings of this convention will, no doubt, be published in a volume and the volume will be a valuable one containing the latest statistics. The newspaper seizes upon every newly discovered fact and lays it before the people almost as soon as it is uttered. Whatever of value occurs in this convention is immediately given to the public by the press. The learned scientist may preach to a limited number of people, the school teacher may inculcate the laws of health, but he can influence only the immature mind of childhood. The press in its capacity as a news gatherer has a national influence. If the cholera breaks out in another part of the country the newspaper gives the information. If the small pox breaks out the people are warned and the authorities take precautionary steps to prevent its spread.

S. C. Stacy briefly discussed the paper, and scored several points in favor of the press.

"The Water supply of Tecumseh" was presented in a paper by Hon. Geo. Howell, M.D.

Water from the natural supply of Tecumseh is pure and healthy. Tecumseh is located upon a plain which extends from north to south about 4 miles and from east to west about 2 miles. The river Raisin and Evans creek both run through this plain. In the western part of the village there is a mixture of sand, and cobble stone. We find a layer of clay here two to 8 feet in thickness. Up to a certain level the sand is filled with water. This water is the natural supply of Tecumseh. It is at a depth varied from 22 to 30 feet according to the elevation. By a survey it is 65 feet higher at the Adrian road than it is at the Globe mill. If we must have wells, cesspools and privy vaults, let the common council examine them, and especially the open well, and where there is danger, let them fill them up and put in a drive well.

The discussion of the paper was taken part in by Dr. Lyster and Mr. Clark.

FRIDAY MORNING.

The convention assembled at 9:30 o'clock with a good audience. Dr. S. Catlin opened the session with a paper on "The Public Health of Tecumseh.

The sanitary condition of Tecumseh has been nothing more or less than the settlement of a class of people—lovers of good laws and order and good health. The geographical situation attracted people here for a home. Many of the pioneers here are at a ripe old age. As far as I can gather this village has never been visited by an epidemic of any kind. We have had but little scarlet fever incident to childhood. We have had a visitation of small pox but three times. Being imported it was easily confined and controlled. The death rate has been no more than the natural outlet of human life. People will sicken and die under any form of government, good or bad. People in any country should be vigilant and anxious about their health. Good health is much easier lost than won.

Dr. Baker—You have eight physicians here you are supporting for the treatment of disease. You have one health officer and pay him $15 a year It seems to me you ought to pay more for the prevention and less for the curing of disease.

Prof. E. A. Wilson presented an interesting paper on "Hygiene in School." A sound body is the ground work of sound intellectual faculties. School hygiene has special reference to the following in connection with the school house and the pupils: Light, heat, ventillation and exercise. The windows should be high, rather than broad and low, and placed as far as possible on the sides of the room. Books with small type should be avoided. The plan of heating and ventillation in use at the central and west branch schools in Tecumseh is the best in use. The temperature is even all over the room. It is the Smead system. Have no recess, but individual recess.

Prof. Wilson's paper was discussed by Prof. Fall, of Albion and Prof. Vaughan, of Ann Arbor. The latter criticised Prof. Wilson's eulogy on the Smead system. Thought it was not a healthy system of ventillation.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

The discussion of school hygiene was continued. Dr. Begel gave a vivid description of the miserably ventilated condition of the school house at Holloway. The Tecumseh school board was called upon to give their opinion of the Smead dry closet system in the west branch building, and Dr. L. G. North, A. W. Mills, and O. P. Bills responded. They all gave a favorable account of the system and thought it was the best they had heard of or seen. The doctor gave a description of the system as to how it operates. The furnace heats the air, when it passes under the floor, and is carried to the foul air room in the basement, then to the closet vaults, whence it escapes to the open air through the flue, carried by a current.

Prof. Vaughan—It a pretty expensive way to get fresh air. It is dangerous to have fecal matter in the building. The draft caused by the opening of a door will change the air current, and cause the foul odors to come into the rooms.

Dr. Baker said the system had been tried at Cleveland, O., and had been taken out. The trouble was the dried matter came out of the chimney and settled down around the neighborhood, and if there were germs of disease in it, caused them to spread.

Dr. C. M. Woodward's paper on the "Relation of Privies and Cesspools to Wells," was illustrated by a map drawn for the occasion. Disease germs have been known to have been carried long distances through the ground and make their appearance where the least expected. While percolation has some effect, it does secure immunity from the danger of disease. If privy vaults and cesspools are placed too close to wells there is danger to the water. It will not be long, it may not be definitely known how long it would be before the soil would become saturated with impurities to a dangerous extent. If it were not for the good natural drainage possessed by this village its health would be suffering badly.

Dr. J. F. Jenkins next read a paper on the "Germ Theory of Disease."

During the past 30 years the germ theory of disease has been the subject of much investigation by scientific men in Europe and America, and they have already demonstrated by the aid of the microscope that a large portion of diseases have their origin in germs. The air we breathe, the water we drink, and even the food we consume contains germs so minute that they can only be observed through microscopes of great power. Many are harmless, others are poisonous and produce diseases of various kinds.

A. Arnold Clark, of Lansing, also gave his experience with germs, after which Dr. Vaughan took up the discussion of Dr. Woodward's paper. He said there were 40,000 people each year in this country who died of typhoid fever and 1000 in this state.

"The Disposal of Waste and Excreta" was advised by Dr. O. Q. Jones in a brief, but interesting paper, which was discussed by Dr. L. M. Jones of Brooklyn.

He said no swill eating animal should be allowed to be kept in the village limits. Soapsuds and dishwater should be poured into a small sewer and carried into a larger one out of danger. Potato peelings and other moist scraps should be burned. Litter from the stable should be thrown out and kept covered so as to be free from drainage.

Dr. L. G. North closed the session with a paper on "The Relation of Climatic Conditions to Diseases." The paper was supplemented by an illustration on a blackboard, showing the different stages of the temperature during the year.

Climatic conditions often cause disease, but all diseases, no matter what, are more or less influenced by climatic conditions. The man whose babe has cholera infantum cannot change summer into fall, but he can stop giving the child poison that is killing him. An umbrella will usually prevent sunstroke, and a well ventillated room will prevent many diseases. Diseases of the air passages belong to the cold months, but the summer has certain classes of disease as well as winter. It would seem that germ diseases would be more prevalent in the summer.

The paper was discussed by Dr. Baker, of Lansing.

FRIDAY EVENING.

The last session of the convention was devoted to the discussion of the subject—"The Restriction and Prevention of Dangerous Diseases," from different standpoints. The subject was opened by a paper from the standpoint of the local board of health, by W. A. Frost.

Too much cannot be expected of the local board of health if they be properly supported by the people, and the successful work of a board of health depends very largely on the co-operation of the citizen. All are not as well posted on the subject as they ought, and might be, and it is hoped that with the aid of the state board of health they will be. Small pox, diphtheria, scarlet fever, typhoid fever are the principal diseases with which our local board of health has to contend with, and should it happen that any of them should find their way in our midst, it is the duty of the board to have them isolated.

From the standpoint of a clergyman it was presented by Rev. F. Adkins. There are laws of health which are divine and immutable, to discover which it is the duty of man as far as this life is concerned. The standpoint of a clergyman is not merely intelligent observation, but of action. Instances where suitable health laws have been faithfully employed have resulted in the saving of sickness and preventing of death.

D. T. Hall spoke from the standpoint of a citizen. We have heard of the vast ravages of typhoid fever in the state of Michigan, and in Tecumseh, but I venture to say that there has not been a genuine case of it in this vicinity for 10 or 20 years. I believe that there are physicians of 10 years practice here who have never seen a case. Dr. Baker scouts the idea of paying our health officer $15 a year. If we have ever had one that earned his money I have my doubts. I am here to speak for the people. The facts are proof, and these are facts. The person who willfully exposes himself or others to contagious diseases is guilty of a felony, and should be punished. Upon the people depend the success of the physician and health officer.

Dr. Baker, of Lansing also discussed the subject. He advocated a house to house inspection for the prevention of typhoid fever. There is no reliable evidence that contagion of scarlet fever is produced outside the body. The state board of health recommends the fumes of burning sulphur as the best disinfectant in a room for the prevention of contagious diseases.

Dr. Loree, of Ridgeway, discussed the paper at some length.

After a vote of thanks to the state board of health, Pres. Howell, Sec. North, and other officers, and after the reading of the treasurer's report, the convention adjourned.

OBITUARY.

Died, at Tecumseh, Mich., Tuesday June 4th, 1889, Mary A. Slayton wife of Jairus P. Slayton.

Mrs Slayton (Miss Mary A. Fowler) was born in Cohocton, Steuben Co. N. Y. July 18th, 1819. In January, 1843, she was married to Mr. Slayton. In 1861 she came with her husband and three children to Tecumseh Michigan, where they have all remained an unbroken family, until at length the beloved wife and mother has, just upon the verge of her three score years and ten, been removed by death. Her last illness was caused in part by a fall and the fracture of her hip. In the death of this estimable women, not only have her husband and children sustained a sad loss, but a large circle of friends who had learned how to appreciate her worth. Her's was one of those quiet unostentatious lives of which the world takes but little note, the record of which however, is on high. In her position as wife and mother, the duties devolving on her were discharged with loving tenderness and scrupulous fidelity. Not only so, but many a one outside the family circle can recall kindly attentions bestowed by her, showing that her sympathies overflowed the narrow bounds of home. The gathering at her funeral was composed of sincere mourners who felt that they had lost a personal friend.

Mrs. Slayton was a valued member of the Presbyterian Church in Tecumseh and her presence and influence will be greatly missed by her fellow members. It is a pleasure to pen this brief tribute in behalf of one who claimed so little for herself and yet did so much to make others happy. One cannot help feeling in regard to such lives as this that the mission they fulfil is a blessed one, and that they leave behind them memories that are peaceful and sweet. W. H. B.

Richard Ford was born at Parish, Oswego County, N. Y. Nov. 19th. 1836. He came to Tecumseh Mich. when 17 years of age. He learned the trade of carriage making in our village of Mr. Asel Taylor, now gone. He worked in what is now known as the Community Carriage Factory, 11 years.

He was married on New Years Eve, 1863 to Miss Juna Ann Harris who survives him. They were the first couple married in the old M. E. church now burned, by its then pastor, Rev. Raisin Sapp, it also being his first wedding.

Their home was on the corner of Marden Lane and Kilbuck streets, in which they lived some 36 years and in which their children, consisting of two sons and two daughters were born. The oldest child, Mrs. J. H. Darling, now living at Duluth Minn. the two sons Albert H. and Wm. H. reside at Bay City, and Mrs. Minnie E. Putman of Tecumseh Mich., were all in attendance at the funeral which occured at his home on Wednesday afternoon, June 5th, Rev. J. S. Joslyn officiating.

Mr. Ford and wife left Tecumseh two years ago for Minn., for his health, making their home with their daughter. About two months ago was taken ill with pneumonia and from which he partially recovered, when another disease set in which caused his death on Sunday June 2nd. at noon. He was 65 years old last Nov. 1888.

His remains reached here Wednesday June 5th, on the noon train, and were at once taken in charge by the Masonic fraternity, who carried him to his old home and attended his funeral in the afternoon, some 60 members being present to pay respect to the memory of their deceased brother.

He was made a Master Mason by Tecumseh Lodge, No 69 Oct. 30th, 1863, and was faithful unto the end. Became an R. A. Mason, Dec., 19th. 1866 the chapter being organized in the Spring of that year. He was a quiet and an unassuming man, and has received the new name given by heaven and entered into rest. Of him more could be truthfully said, but as there will undoubtedly be resolutions offered by the Masonic fraternity, as is the custom by well regulated lodges, in his memory, we end our Masonic words of praise at this point.

In his home he was a loving faithful husband and a wise and kind father, as a neighbor and friend, none new him but to esteem. Being well governed he endeav'rd to govern well, Never had a quarrel or an unkind word with a human soul and so harbored no enmity dislike or ill will.

In religion he made no outward manifestation, outside of his quiet manly daily life. In spirit, though we do not claim for him purity, his wisdom seemed to be from above, and it was peaceable, gently easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without variance or partiality, without hypocrisy. Peacefulness was his virtue, and as such it hallowed his departure and must make his future glorious.—James, 3:17—18.

Died at Toledo at 1:15 P. M. June 7th of whooping cough, Charlotte Bidwell, daughter of DeLoss C. and Pauline M. LeBaron aged 8 years, 10 months and 3 days. The remains were brought to Tecumseh Saturday evening for burial. The funeral was held at Mr. C. F. Morley's Sunday afternoon at 5 o'clock. The large attendance and many beautiful floral offerings showed much sympathy for the parents in their deep affliction.

Two great enemies—Hood's Sarsaparilla and impure blood. The latter is utterly defeated by the peculiar medicine.

The Annual Sermon will be preached by Rev. W. H. Babbitt at the Presbyterian church Sunday eve. June 23.

Miss Alice Garlinghouse went to Medina last week, and spent two days.

Miss Francis Kehoe went to Clinton Friday.

We were very much disappointed in not seeing Gov. Luce in our school last Friday morning. But as he returned home sooner than expected, it it was quite impossible for him to be here.

Any one would be well paid for the time they might spend in looking over the Exhibition work in the office at the union building. It is a fine display, and shows the skill of little ones as well as that of the member of the high school. S. T. F.

ONSTED ODDS.

Children's day services were also observed at Springville, and a nice program rendered.

L. D. Dewey of Tecumseh was in this vicinity last week buying wool for which he paid the highest market price and seems to a be thorough business man and a gentleman.

ADVICE TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

In nine cases out of ten, wives, who are annoyed with fretful husbands, have only themselves to blame. Middle aged men especially who are harrassed with the cares of business need something beside a bread and milk and tea diet. The family table should be furnished with choice meats well cooked, and no amount of good cooking will make a palatable, nourishing dish out of poor material. The best housekeepers in Tecumseh are learning this fact and patronize the West End Market, where they can always procure the choicest steaks, the juciest roasts, the tenderest fowls, the finest sausage and every thing else, in the meat line, of superior quality. Call and be convinced.

BIRDSALL, GLENN & CO.

"Tired All the Time,"

Say many poor men and women, who seem overworked, or are debilitated by change of season, climate or life. If you could read the hundreds of letters praising Hood's Sarsaparilla which came from people whom it has restored to health, you would be convinced of its merits. As this is impossible, why not try Hood's Sarsaparilla yourself and thus realize its benefit? It will tone and build up your system, give a good appetite, overcome that tired feeling and make you feel, as one woman expresses it, "like a new creature."

In company with friends from Texas, he is now on his way to Europe, for a Summer's vacation.

The game between Clinton and Tecumseh, Tuesday, was particularly noticable for its errors, but the battery work of Heidenrich and Palmer, and the hitting of Eckhert, Loomis and Heidenrich were enjoyable features of the game. Score 12 to 10 in favor of Tecumseh. Now that the boys have, with a picked up nine, defeated a strong team like Clinton, we see no reason why there should not be a strong team organized here, and with teams at Blissfield, Adrian, Hudson, Clinton and Tecumseh, a county league would furnish some very entertaining games here this summer.

Strange as it may seem, the lifers at the prison—many of them murderers—strongly object to the introduction of Irving Latimer into their coterie. Some of them have killed men, a few of them have killed women, but they feel wroth at the idea of having to receive one convicted of killing his own mother. So far as can be learned, Irving Latimer will occupy the unenviable position of being the first one sent there for that offense.—Jackson Patriot.

Wide Awake for June might well be called a "true-story number." It opens with a reproduction of Henry Bacon's beautiful painting, "The End of a Long Day," photografphed especially for Wide Awake—a lovely picture. Then comes the true stories—five of them: "A Plain Case" is by the now famous writer, Miss Wilkins, who grew her early laurels in Wide Awake; this story is most pathetic. The scene of Miss Risley Steward's brilliant story is on board an ocean steamer; it is entitled "The Naughtiest Boy I Ever Met."

THE RAISIN INSTITUTE.

Annual Reunion of the Old Students at Frank Rector's last Thursday. A large number in attendance and an Entertaining Program Presented

The annual gatherings held by the old graduates of the Raisin Institute have become a fixed institution in this section of the county and they are regarded with much pleasure by those who attend them. The reunion this year was held at Mr. F. C. Rector's, on the Clinton road. A better day could not have been chosen nor a better place selected. It is no flattery to Mr. Rector to say that he owns one of the model farms of Lenawee County. His spacious dwelling and large barns afford ample means for accommodating a large company, and it goes without saying that the guests present on Thursday last were right royally entertained.

The guests began to arrive as early as nine o'clock in the morning and for over two hours teams were pouring into Mr Rector's yards from all points of the compass. The time before the dinner hour was pleasantly passed in social chat and the renewal of old acquaintance. Several were present who had not met before since they left school over forty years ago. Dinner was served to over one hundred people, the members of the association present being 98, to which ample justice was done. Rev. Mr. Patchen, as usual, invoked the divine blessing at dinner.

A short season of respite followed after dinner and the meeting was then called to order by the President Mrs. Julia Edwards. Rev. Mr. Patchen read a selection of scripture and offered prayer. A fine piano selection was executed by Miss. Smith of Clinton.

The Secretary, A. G. Hall, and the Treasurer, Mrs. Eliza Camburn, submitted their reports.

The address of welcome was given by W. H. Colyer of Blissfield.

Response by Rev. Mr. Patchen. In his remarks he gave a brief but very interesting history of the founding of the institute. He exhibited a paper called the Raisin Union which was published by the students in 1846. Among its contributors were L. D. Watkins, F. V. Horton, F. S. Rogers and E. M. Ives.

Letters of regret were read from P. V. Roots, who was one of the first Teachers and is now 82 years of age, and from Aunt Laura Haviland, who is at present in Europe. Her letter was dated, East London, and this was the first reunion she has ever missed attending, having once traveled all the way from Kansas to attend one.

A select reading was then given by Mrs. Phoebe Curtis, and a fine poem by Miss. Caroline Colvin. Geo. Griswold favored the campany with some old time anecdotes.

The committee on program submitted the following report for the next reunion which was adopted.

Prayer.
Singing by the Choir.
Welcome by the President.
Response—L. D. Watkins.
Early Days of the Institute—Rev. Jno. Patchen.
Singing by the Choir.
Essay—Mrs. Eliza Pope.

Last year a committee was appointed to draft suitable resolutions on the death of Warren J. Holdrige, and upon any members who might die during the year. This committee consisted of A. H. Briggs, A. G. Hall, and Mrs. F. C. Rector. During the past year, the chairman himself joined the "great majority," and Mr. Hall in behalf of the balance of the committee, submitted the following resolutions which were adopted.

Resolutions.

WHEREAS, In the Providence of Almighty God he has permitted the silent messenger of death to enter our circle since our last meeting taking from our midst our worthy friend Mr. A. H. Briggs and Mr. L. B. Hill and just before our last meeting Mr. W. J. Holdridge, leaving the places they filled forever vacant, and WHERKAS, it becomes the sad duty of the remaining members of our social circle to express our sympathy to the sorrowing friends. Therefore,

Resolved, that while we bow with submission to the will of the Supreme Ruler and mourn the loss of those who were an honor to our society we will ever cherish their memories and extend our heartfelt sympathy to those who deeply mourn their loss.

The following officers were chosen for the coming year.

President—Mrs. Geo. Curtis.
Vice—Mrs. F. C. Rector.
Secretary—Mrs. Phoebe Curtis.
Treasurer—Mrs. Dr. Reynolds

The usual "Aunt Laura" cake was presented this year by Mrs. Eliza Pope. In the center was a candy birds nest with a drop to represent each one of her children, the name "Aunt Laura" being tastefully arranged around the margin.

This closed the formal exercises of the day. Ice Cream and cake were then served and an hour or two more was passed in social converse. At five o'clock the guests began to take their departure, many of whom had traveled a long distance, but it was nearly sun down before the last one left for home. All the towns in this part of the county were represented, although Raisin, of course, furnished the largest proportion. It was one of the best reunions ever held by the society, and it will be a difficult task to surpass it in future years.

JESUS CRUCIFIED.

LESSON XI, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JUNE 16.

Text of the Lesson, Mark xv, 21-28—Commit Verses 25-28—Golden Text, Phil. ii, 8—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher Philadelphia.]

21. "And they compel one Simon, a Cyrenian, who passed by, * * * to bear His cross." Both Matthew and Luke also relate this incident, while John says that "He, bearing His cross, went forth" (xix, 17). It would appear that Jesus Himself bore His own cross as they started forth for Calvary, but either on account of His giving evidence of fainting under it, or on account of His moving too slowly for them because of weakness through suffering, they lay hold upon this man and compel him to bear it after Jesus.

22. "And they bring Him into the place, Golgotha." Matthew and John each give the same name and the same significance to it, "the place of a skull," while Luke calls it Calvary, which is the Greek equivalent for the Chaldee Golgotha, and signifies the same. John xix, 20, says that it was nigh to the city, and Rev. xi, 8, identifies it with the city. Luke is the only one who makes any mention of the walk from Pilate's judgment hall to the place of crucifixion, and he tells us of a great company of people and women who followed, bewailing and lamenting, and that Jesus spoke to them, saying that there was more occasion to weep for themselves than for Him, because of the judgments about to fall on their city and nation. Luke also mentions the two others as being led with Him to be put to death. (Luke xxiii, 27-32.)

23. "And they gave Him to drink wine mingled with myrrh, but He received it not." Matthew says that it was vinegar mingled with gall, and that when He had tasted He would not drink. As the vinegar was a sour kind of light wine, the usual beverage of the Roman soldiers, and the word gall is used to denote anything bitter, therefore both accounts perfectly agree, and there was a fulfillment of that which was written: "They gave me also gall for my meat, and in my thirst they gave me vinegar to drink." (Ps. lxix, 21.) It may be that this drink was a stupefying potion mercifully given to lessen the sufferings, but if so, it is manifest that Jesus would take nothing to lighten in any way that which He came to endure.

24. "And when they had crucified Him." Who can tell the agony contained in that sentence? Let every teacher make it as real as possible both to himself and to his scholars.

26. "And the superscription of His accusation was written over, The King of the Jews." John gives the title in full as Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews, and says that it was written in Hebrew and Greek and Latin; and that although the chief priests found fault with it, Pilate insisted on keeping it as he had written it. Thus was proclaimed to all the world the truth yet to be made manifest to all nations, that the despised and crucified Nazarene is indeed the King of the Jews, who as an immortal man shall sit on David's throne and reign over the House of Jacob and at the same time be King over all the earth. (Luke i, 32, 33; Zech. xiv, 9.)

27. "And with Him they crucify two thieves; the one on His right hand, and the other on His left." Jesus in the midst as if He were the greatest criminal of the three; how every possible indignity both of life and death was heaped upon Him as if the devil could not do enough to incite men to manifest his and their hatred of this Holy and spotless Lamb of God; and now He is by these surroundings pointed out as a fit companion of murderers and thieves.

28. "And the scripture was fulfilled which saith, And He was numbered with the transgressors."

29. "And they that passed by railed on Him." They use the words of some of the false witnesses, a perversion of some of Jesus' words, and this even in His sore distress they revile Him; such is their conduct that it seems as if hell itself was let loose upon Him, and was it not even so?

30. "Save thyself, and come down from the cross." Matthew adds: "If thou be the Son of God." He could save Himself had He desired it, for all the soldiers in the world could not take Him, nor all the nails ever made hold Him on the cross, unless He was willing to be taken and held; but he chose not to save Himself in order that He might save us.

31. "Likewise also the chief priests, mocking, said among themselves with the scribes, He saved others; Himself He cannot save." Perhaps they did not think what they were saying when they confessed that "He saved others."

32. "Let Christ the King of Israel descend now from the cross, that we may see and believe." No, you shall not be gratified, for it is unbelief and hatred that asks it; but the time will come when this same Jesus shall descend from Heaven in power and great glory, and then shall Israel weep and mourn as they look upon Him whom they have pierced and see that it is Jesus.

33. "And when the sixth hour was come there was darkness over the whole land until the ninth hour." That is from 12 to 3 p. m. The mocking has ceased, this is no natural darkness, and a solemn stillness is upon all. It reminds us of the darkness of Gen. i, 2, and the three days darkness in Egypt that could be felt.

34-37. "And at the ninth hour Jesus cried with a loud voice, * * * and gave up the ghost." After uttering these words of verse 34, which are found in Ps. xxii, 1, he added later "I thirst," "It is finished," "Father, into Thy hands I commend my spirit." The seven sayings from the cross are found in the probable order in which they were uttered, in the following passages: Luke xxiii, 34, 43; John xix, 27; Matt. xxvii, 46; John xix, 28, 30; Luke xxiii, 46; and direct our thoughts to His love for sinners, reception of penitents, care for our need, the depth of His sufferings, His thirst for souls, completed atonement, triumph of faith; but as little do we understand or appreciate these cries as did they who thought that He called for Elias.

38. "And the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom." "Having therefore, brethren, boldness to enter into the holiest by the blood of Jesus, by a new and living way which He hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say, His flesh, let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith" (Heb. x, 19-22.) Here we are taught that the veil was a symbol of His body, in which the glory of His being was concealed during his life of humiliation, but now that He has completed the work of atonement the way is open for all.

39. "Truly this man was the Son of God." Matthew says that in addition to the rending of the veil, which would be seen only by the priest officiating, there were other signs which must have been known to all, for "the earth did quake, and the rocks rent, and the graves were opened." (Matt. xxvii, 51, 52.) Whether it was the cries of Jesus—all of them or only the last one—or whether it was the cries and the accompanying signs, which led this soldier to make this confession, we can only hope that the light of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ really dawned in his soul, and that his confession meant allegiance to Him.

SEVENTH POINT

You should read THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS because you can afford it. Price doesn't stand in the way. It's really the cheapest thing on earth. One cent means practically nothing—until you spend it. Then you may make it mean a great deal, according as you invest it. A thing is cheap if it costs little, and is worth much. THE DAILY NEWS is like a telegraph from the whole world to your brain. To keep it in constant working order costs you but one cent a day. That's why it's cheap—because it renders a great service for an insignificant price.

Remember—Its circulation is 220,000 a day—over a million a week—and it costs by mail 25 cts. a month, four months $1.00,—one cent a day.

The Great War Syndicate.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON.

Author of "Rudder Grange," "Amos Kilbright," "The Bee Man of Orn," "The Christmas Wreck," "The Lady or the Tiger," "The Late Mrs. Null," "The Hundredth Man," "The Casting Away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine," "The Dusantes," etc.

The British captain stood for a moment motionless, and then he picked up a rammer and ran it into the muzzle of the cannon which had been discharged. The great gun was empty. The instantaneous motor bomb was not there.

Now he was convinced that the syndicate had not mined the fortresses which they had destroyed.

In twenty minutes the two British officers were on board the transport, which then steamed rapidly westward. The crabs again took the repeller in tow, and the syndicate's fleet continued its eastward course, passing through the wide expanse of glittering scum which had spread itself upon the sea.

They were not two-thirds of their way across the Atlantic when the transport reached St. Johns, and the cable told the world that the Craglevin had been annihilated.

This news was received with amazement, and even consternation. It came from an officer in the Royal navy, and how could it be doubted that a great man-of-war had been destroyed in a moment by one shot from the syndicate's vessel! And yet, even now, there were persons who did doubt, and who asserted that the crabs might have placed a great torpedo under the Craglevin; that a wire attached to this torpedo ran out from the repeller, and that the British captain had merely fired the torpedo. But hour by hour, as fuller news came across the ocean, the number of these doubters became smaller and smaller.

In the midst of the great public excitement which now existed on both sides of the Atlantic—in the midst of all the conflicting opinions, fears and hopes—the dominant sentiment seemed to be, in America as well as in Europe, one of curiosity. Were these six crabs and one repeller bound for the British Isles? And if so, what did they intend to do when they got there?

It was now generally admitted that one of the syndicate's crabs could disable a man-of-war; that one of the syndicate's repellers could withstand the heaviest artillery fire, and that one of the syndicate's motor bombs could destroy a vessel or a fort. But these things had been proved in isolated combats, where the new methods of attack and defense had had almost undisturbed opportunity for exhibiting their efficiency. But what could a repeller and half a dozen crabs do against the combined force of the Royal navy, a navy which had in the last few years regained its supremacy among the nations, and which had made Great Britain once more the first maritime power in the world?

The crabs might disable some men-of-war, the repeller might make her calculations and discharge her bomb at a ship or a fort, but what would the main body of the navy be doing meanwhile? Overwhelming, crushing and sinking to the bottom crabs, repeller, motor guns and everything that belonged to them.

In England there was a feeling of strong resentment that such a little fleet should be allowed to sail with such intent into British waters. This resentment extended itself not only to the impudent syndicate, but toward the government, and the opposition party gained daily in strength. The opposition papers had been loud and reckless in their denunciations of the slowness and inadequacy of the naval preparations, and loaded the government with the entire responsibility not only of the damage which had already been done to the forts, the ships, and the prestige of Great Britain, but also for the threatened danger of a sudden descent of the syndicate's fleet upon some unprotected point upon the coast. This fleet should never have been allowed to approach within a thousand miles of England. It should have been sunk in mid-ocean, if its sinking had involved the loss of a dozen men-of-war.

In America a very strong feeling of dissatisfaction showed itself. From the first the syndicate contract had not been popular, but the quick, effective and business like action of that body of men, and the marked success up to this time of their inventions and their operations, had caused a great reaction in their favor. They had, so far, successfully defended the American coast, and when they had increased the number of their vessels, they would have been relied upon to continue that defense. Even if a British armada had set out to cross the Atlantic, its movements must have been slow and cumbrous, and the swift and sudden strokes with which the syndicate waged war could have been given by night and by day over thousands of miles of ocean.

Whether or not these strokes would have been quick enough or hard enough to turn back an armada might be a question, but there could be no question of the suicidal policy of sending seven ships and two cannon to conquer England. It seemed as if the success of the syndicate had so puffed up its members with pride and confidence in their powers that they had come to believe that they had only to show themselves to conquer, whatever might be the conditions of the contest.

The destruction of the syndicate's fleet would now be a heavy blow to the United States. It would produce an utter want of confidence in the councils and judgments of the syndicate, which could not be counteracted by the strongest faith in the efficiency of their engines of war, and it was feared that it might become necessary, even at this critical juncture, to annul the contract with the syndicate, and to depend upon the American navy for the defense of the American coast.

Even among the men on board the syndicate's fleet there were signs of doubt and apprehensions of evil. It had all been very well so far, but fighting one ship at a time was a very different thing from steaming into the midst of a hundred ships. On board the repeller there was now an additional reason for fears and misgivings. The unlucky character of the vessel when it had been the Tallapoosa was known, and not a few of the men imagined that it must now be time for some new disaster to this ill starred craft, and if her evil genius had desired fresh disaster for her, it was certainly sending her into a good place to look for it.

But the syndicate neither doubted nor hesitated, nor paid any attention to the doubts and condemnations which they heard from every quarter. Four days after the news of the destruction of the Craglevin had been telegraphed from Canada to London, the syndicate's fleet entered the English channel. Owing to the power and speed of the crabs, Repeller No. 11 had made a passage of the Atlantic which in her old naval career would have been considered miraculous.

Craft of various kinds were now passed, but none of them carried the British flag. In the expectation of the arrival of the enemy, British merchantmen and fishing vessels had been advised to keep in the background until the British navy had concluded its business with the vessels of the American syndicate.

As has been said before, the British admiralty had adopted a new method of defense for the rudders and screw propellers of naval vessels against the attacks of submerged craft. The work of constructing the new appliances had been pushed forward as fast as possible, but so far only one of these had been finished and attached to a man-of-war.

The Llangaron was a recently built ironclad of the same size and class as the Adamant; and to her had been attached the new stern defense. This was an immense steel cylinder, entirely closed, and rounded at the ends. It was about ten feet in diameter, and strongly braced inside. It was suspended by chains from two davits which projected over the stern of the vessel. When sailing this cylinder was hoisted up to the davits, but when the ship was prepared for action it was lowered until it lay, nearly submerged, abaft of the rudder. In this position its ends projected about fifteen feet on either side of the propeller blades.

It was believed that this cylinder would effectually prevent a crab from getting near enough to the propeller or the rudder to do any damage. It could not be torn away as the stern jacket had been, for the rounded and smooth sides and ends of the massive cylinder would offer no hold to the forceps of the crabs; and, approaching from any quarter, it would be impossible for these forceps to reach rudder or screw.

The syndicate's little fleet arrived in British waters late in the day; and early the next morning it appeared about twenty miles to the south of the Isle of Wight, and headed to the northeast as if it were making for Portsmouth. The course of these vessels greatly surprised the English government and naval authorities. It was expected that an attack would probably be made upon some comparatively unprotected spot on the British seaboard, and therefore on the west coast of Ireland and in St. George's channel preparations of the most formidable character had been made to defend British ports against Repeller No. 11 and her attendant crabs. Particularly was this the case in Bristol channel, where a large number of ironclads were stationed, and which was to have been the destination of the Llangaron if the syndicate's vessels had delayed their coming long enough to allow her to get around there. That this little fleet should have sailed straight for England's great naval stronghold was something that the British admiralty could not understand. The fact was not appreciated that it was the object of the syndicate to measure its strength with the greatest strength of the enemy. Anything less than this would not avail its purpose.

Notwithstanding that so many vessels had been sent to different parts of the coast, there was still in Portsmouth harbor a large number of war vessels of various classes, all in commission and ready for action. The greater part of these had received orders to cruise that day in the channel. Consequently it was still early in the morning when around the eastern end of the Isle of Wight there appeared a British fleet composed of fifteen of the finest ironclads, with several gunboats and cruisers, and a number of torpedo boats.

It was a noble sight, for besides the war ships there was another fleet hanging upon the outskirts of the first, and composed of craft, large and small, and from both sides of the channel, filled with those who were anxious to witness from afar the sea fight which was to take place under such novel conditions. Many of these observers were reporters and special correspondents for great newspapers. On some of the vessels which came up from the French coast were men with marine glasses of extraordinary power, whose business it was to send an early and accurate report of the affair to the office of the war syndicate in New York.

As soon as the British ships came in sight, the four crabs cast off from Repeller No. 11. Then with the other two they prepared for action, moving considerably in advance of the repeller, which now steamed forward very slowly. The wind was strong from the northwest, and the sea high, the shining tops of the crabs frequently disappearing under the waves.

The British fleet came steadily on, headed by the great Llangaron. This vessel was very much in advance of the others, for knowing that when she was really in action and the great cylinder which formed her stern guard was lowered into the water her speed would be much retarded, she had put on all steam, and being the swiftest war ship of her class, she had distanced all her consorts. It was highly important that she should begin the fight and engage the attention of as many crabs as possible while certain of the other ships attacked the repeller with their rams. Although it was now generally believed that motor bombs from a repeller might destroy a man-of-war, it was also considered probable that the accurate calculations which appeared to be necessary to precision of aim could not be made when the object of the aim was in rapid motion.

But whether or not one or more motor bombs did strike the mark, or whether or not one or more vessels were blown into fine particles, there were a dozen ironclads in that fleet, each of whose commanders and officers were determined to run into that repeller and crush her, if so be they held together long enough to reach her.

An Imperative Necessity.

What pure air is to an unhealthy locality, what spring cleaning is to the neat house-keeper, so is Hood's Sarsaparilla to every-body, at this season. The body needs to be thoroughly renovated, the blood purified and vitalized, the germs of disease destroyed. Scrofula, Salt Rheum, and all other blood disorders are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, the most popular and successful spring medicine.

The commencement exercises at the Raisin Valley Seminary will occur this year on Friday, June 21.

WHY IS IT

That people linger along always complaining about that continual tired feeling? One bottle of BEGG'S PURIFIER and BLOOD MAKER will entirely remove this feeling, give them a good appetite and regulate digestion.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we receive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

WRITING MACHINE CABINET and OFFICE DESK

For Remington, Hammond, and Crandall Type Writer.

The advantages of this Type-writer and Office Desk over all other so-called Combination Cabinets, are:

First.—The ease and simplicity with which the desk is changed from a Library or Office Desk to a Type-writer Table. This change is effected by pushing the lid covering the machine back in the rear of cabinet—it being a roller top—removing it entirely from sight, thus overcoming the objectionable board and sounder in front of the operator. The movable top is perfectly flat, is base covered, and forms a complete writing desk when the machine is not in use. The table on which the machine rests is so evenly balanced by our patent adjustments that it needs but a slight touch to bring the machine in position.

Second.—The advantages of the swinging table are; The table is so balanced near its center on patent malleable iron arms, that when the machine brought in place for use, it does not depend on ropes or hangers at rear of platform for support, but is held rigidly in place by its own weight thus making it impossible for the machine to be tumbled down on the floor in back of desk by the breaking of a rear support. The machine rests on patent stages which keeps the machine in place, and can be drawn out beyond the desk, well under the operator's hand.

Third.—The construction of the lid closing machine space makes it air tight, and the table having felt around its boarders thoroughly protects the machine from dust.

Fourth.—The foot rest and the construction of the table adjustments makes the desk as rigid as though the top was one solid board, which is a matter of great importance where a solid type-writing table is required. No operator can do good work on a shaky table.

Lastly.—The cabinet is a splendid piece of cabinet work. We manufacture them in Walnut, Antique Oak, Natural Oak, Natural Cherry, Cherry imitation Mahogany and Ash.

Agents wanted to sell these cabinets, and where we have no agencies established we will sell direct from all factory to consumers.

HARVESTERS AND BINDERS.

There are several harvesting and binding machines in the market now, and the competition between them is waxing hot as harvest season approaches. Without disparaging other machines, we confidently assert that the Milwaukee Junior leads them all. In these FIVE particulars its superiority is unquestioned;

1. DURABILITY—In the construction of the Junior, the best material the country affords is used: skilled mechanics are employed in our factory, and each machine is thoroughly tested and inspected before shipment. We shall continue to furnish, regardless of expense, the most durable Harvester and Binder, and depend upon an appreciative and intelligent public to maintain the high standard of the Milwaukee Junior.

2. SIMPLICITY—Complication is a thing to be avoided in all kinds of machinery, and this has been effectually done in the Junior Harvester and Binder. In adding new features to our machine, it has always been our aim to simplify rather than complicate and in this way we have greatly reduced the number of wearing parts, thereby increasing its durability and lessening its draft.

3. EASE OF MANAGEMENT—In placing the levers, we have carefully considered the convenience of the operator, and so arranged them that he can put the machine in proper adjustment for cutting all kinds of grain without leaving his seat, and so easily are the different changes made that a boy who can guide the team can operate the Milwaukee Junior.

4. LIGHTNESS OF DRAFT—Our Junior is the first and still remains the only successful two-horse harvester and binder on the market, and is so acknowledged by all our competitors, its weight being only 1150 pounds.

5. PRICE—No other machine in the market of equal value is sold at so low a figure. Any farmer can test this assertion by pricing the different machines.

I invite the farmers of northern Lenawee to call at my headquarters—Williamson's poultry house—in Tecumseh, and examine this machine before placing their orders.

$100 REWARD. $100.

The readers of the HERALD will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength, by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

DEATH OF WILLIAM QUEAL.

The subject of this tribute was one of the best known and most highly esteemed citizens of Cambridge. On Tuesday morning, June 4th, William Queal arose, apparently as well as usual. Scarcely without a moment's warning, the dread messenger summoned him. He experienced a sudden cessation of the heart, and before his daughter Ellen could obtain assistance from the neighbors he had breathed his last.

The deceased had been a resident of Cambridge township for more than 40 years. He was one of the oldest Justices in the county, having held that office almost since his first residence in Michigan. He was the eldest of a family of nine children, two sons and seven daughters, all of whom lived to maturity. He was born at Utica, N. Y. Oct. 9, 1812. His boyhood was passed in the humble home of his father, who was a shoemaker, and he acquired a good education for those days at the Utica Academy. Having completed his course at school, he entered the study of Rev. Stephen R. Smith, founder of the Clinton Liberal Institute at Clinton N. Y., where he pursued a course of reading for the Universalist ministry. After his ordination he served as pastor of the church at Mottville and other points in New York, for about three years. In 1836 he made a trip to Chicago, Ill, in the interest of the church, and while there, in co operation with some friends, assisted in purchasing a lot in the new village, on which to erect a building to be known as the first Universalist Church. During this visit he delivered the first Universalist sermon ever preached in Chicago, and conducted meetings there for several weeks which were well attended. Having accomplished the object of his mission and organized a society to hold property under the laws of Illinois, he returned to New York and assumed the pastorate of a church at Bristol, Ontario Co., where he remained eleven years. During this period he spent one year in Indiana for his health, and in 1848, still suffering from bronchial trouble, came to Michigan for recuperation. But the change of climate did not produce the desired effect. He never recovered the full use of his voice, and for this reason he was reluctantly compelled to withdraw from the Ministry. He then purchased fifty acres of land on section twenty-three in Cambridge, where he has since resided with his family. While improving this farm and converting it into a beautiful home, he also for many years carried on the business of manufacturing and selling boots and shoes at Springville. On the 14th day of January 1835, he was united in marriage at Aurelius N. Y., with Miss Samantha Moore. His domestic life was a happy one. Two daughters, both grown to womanhood, Ellen G., who now lives at home and Mary Alice the wife of George Dewey, Esq., and his wife survive him. His only brother, Rev. Robert Queal, who is also a Universalist clergyman, still survives and was present at the funeral.

The funeral obsequies were conducted by Rev. J. M Getchell of Tecumseh, who was assisted by Father Wooden, at the late residence of the deceased, Thursday forenoon, June 6th, when a very large concourse of people assembled to pay their last tribute of respect to an honored neighbor and townsman. Seldom has a larger funeral been held in that township. He was plain spoken and independent in all his views, and was a magistrate possessed of learning and integrity. A kind father, an indulgent husband, a friend of education, an honored citizen has gone to his final reward.

Its striking advantages are—three rollers as compared with six; one canvas versus three; six bearings as compared with twelve; three buckles versus twelve. The draft of the machine is thereby very materially reduced. The apron is driven from the underside, hence the upper side or top of apron is comparatively loose and easily passes, without friction, under the apron guides.

The only Binder adjustments on the Wood are the three desirable ones—Regulating Size of Bundle—Regulating tightness of Binding—Regulating position of Band. Each of these adjustments is made instantly.

Augustus Montgomery, who has been in poor health for some time, passed away Saturday afternoon at half past five. The funeral services were held Tuesday at 11 o'clock at the church, Rev. J. A. Lowry, officiating. The remains were laid at rest in the family lot in the cemetery near the village. The deceased was born in Lodi, Seneca Co., N. Y., August 2d. 1807. Was married to Esther Brewster of the same place January 14th, 1830. The first two years of their married life was spent on a farm in N. Y. In the fall of 1833 they came to Michigan, then a territory, and purchased a piece of land of the government and began clearing it up, fully realizing the reality of pioneer life in securing a new home. In 1841 he was elected supervisor, the first one elected in the township, holding the same office for several years; also having had intrusted to his careful consideration and excellent judgment several public trusts, such as administrator and guardian, always performing his duty with satisfaction and honor. He was consulted by his neighbors and friends for his advice in private as well as public affairs, which if followed out led to prosperity and success. His life has been one of toil from early morning till late evening. His home was a welcome one to any who sought it, having had five grandchildren left in his care in their youth, cared for them as tenderly as if they were his own, and by his death they lost a dear and indulgent grandfather. He leaves a large circle of neighbors and friends who will miss him, for he was a kind and obliging neighbor, always generous to those in want.

Mrs. Francis Coats, whose funeral was held at the church on Thursday afternoon, June 13th, was born in Wexford, near Dublin, Ireland, May 14th, 1819. Her parents died when she was quite young and at the age of 15 she came to America with an uncle, spending a short time in Canada, then came to Tecumseh and made her home with Judge Blanchard's family. She was married to Francis Coats at the age of 22, by Rev. Joseph Edmonson. They began life as pioneers in what is known as the English settlement, where they lived until Mr. Coats' death in September, 1874. The following May she moved to the village where she has since lived. For the past five years she has been in feeble health, not being able to leave the house. She became a member of the Episcopal church when in her youth and was a devoted christian. Since making her home in our community she took an interest in the church here and contributed freely and cheerfully. Her home was free to all and those who entered were made welcome and received a mother's advice and counsel. She leaves a large circle of neighbors and friends who mourn her death.

Peter Osterhout, was a native of Penn Yan, Yates Co. York State, who with his wife and daughter, then a child, came to Michigan about 35 years ago. He died June 1st. 1889, at three o'clock in the morning, having been quite feeble for two years, or more; and during the winter, confined most of his time within doors, coughing much, with a continued wasting, until a few weeks before death, when he lost the use of his feet and limbs from a paralized condition, which brought him to his bed helpless. When visited one week before the end, said, he had a desire, to leave this world, to enter the heavenly. He spoke of his family and daughter, son-in law and wife who had been so kind and good to him. He is the sixth one dead of a family of eight brothers and two sisters. But two brothers, of the ten are now living. Leaving a wife, an only daughter, who is the wife of Mr. Swick, with three grand children, to mourn his loss, aged 73 years and five days. Funeral services were conducted from his late home by Rev. James Wright of Britton Sunday June 2nd, at 1:30 P. M.; when his remains were accompanied to Ridgeway Cemetery for burial, by a goodly number of friends and citizens. So ends one more life of an aged citizen of Lenawee Co. Michigan. J. W.

ADVICE TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

In nine cases out of ten, wives, who are annoyed with fretful husbands, have only themselves to blame. Middle aged men especially who are harrassed with the cares of business need something beside a bread and milk and tea diet. The family table should be furnished with choice meats well cooked, and no amount of good cooking will make a palatable, nourishing dish out of poor material. The best housekeepers in Tecumseh are learning this fact and patronize the West End Market, where they can always procure the choicest steaks, the juciest roasts, the tenderest fowls, the finest sausage and every thing else in the meat line, of superior quality. Call and be convinced.

Of the success of Hood's Sarsaparilla is the fact that every purchaser receives a fair equivalent of his money. The familiar headline "100 Doses One Dollar," stolen by imitators, is original with and true of Hood's Sarsaparilla. This can easily be proven by any one who desires to test the matter. For real economy, buy only Hood's Sarsaparilla. Sold by all druggists.

100 Ladies Wanted.

And 100 men to call on any druggist for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicine, the great root and herb remedy, discovered by Dr. Silas Lane while in the Rocky Mountains. For diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys it is a positive cure. For constipation and clearing up the complexion it does wonders. Children like it. Everyone praises it. Large-size package, 50 cents. At all druggists'.

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

DREADFUL CALAMITY IN IRELAND.

An Excursion Train Loaded with Sunday School Children Breaks in Half with Frightful Consequences.

Seventy-Two Dead Taken Out of the Ruins, Many of Them Little Ones, and 100 Wounded—Worst Accident Since the Tay Bridge Collapse—Work on the Chaos at Johnstown Begun by the State—The Plan of Operations Adopted—Devastating Fire at Grinnell, Iowa—The Heart of the Town in Ashes.

DUBLIN, June 13.—A railway disaster occurred near Armagh, yesterday morning, which has no parallel in the history of railway travel in Ireland in its awful loss of life or the character of the victims. The train was carrying a Sunday school excursion bound for the popular little seaside resort of Warren's Point and was made up of two sections. Fully 1,200 children and their relatives and teachers were on board.

The Train Breaks in Half.

The train, a short distance out of Armagh, was ascending a steep grade to a bank that rises to a height of fifty feet, when the engine of the rear section gave out and was unable to draw the heavy train. In some way, which is not clearly understood, several of the rear cars became detached from the balance of the train and started down the steep grade. In a few seconds the cars were going down-hill at a terrific rate of speed with the brakes either utterly useless or from negligence on the part of the guard without proper attention.

Frightful Results of the Collision.

The engineer of the rear train saw the detached cars dashing down upon him in time to stop the engine, but notwithstanding this the force of the collision was terrible, as at the moment they struck the locomotive the wild coaches were flying at the rate of fifty miles an hour. The collision was terrific in its force and frightful in its results, and the scenes at the wreck were heart-sickening. Dozens of children and adults were dead, while others were held in the wreck with broken limbs and horribly mangled bodies, and their screams and appeals for succor were blood-curdling and piteous to a degree past description. The dead and dying little ones were spattered in inextricable confusion among the jagged timbers and twisted iron, while the passengers from both trains who were unhurt stood by almost helpless with horror to relieve the sufferers.

The Soldiers to the Rescue.

A man who was riding on the highway close by saw the collision and without stopping to see any more hastened away at once to Armagh and returned with a company of soldiers from the barracks there. These came provided with stretchers and, being the first on the ground to render assistance, did good work in extricating the living and the dead from the wreck.

The Living and Dead.

People from the surrounding country flocked to the scene and set to work to remove the victims from the wreck. Physicians were summoned by telegraph from Belfast and other points and attended to the wants of the injured, while the dead were taken from the ruins as fast as possible and placed in rows upon the grass.

At 11 o'clock last night the list of dead numbered seventy-two, with almost a certainty that there are among the large number of injured will die. This makes the disaster the greatest railway horror that has ever been known in the United Kingdom, with the possible exception of the memorable Tay bridge disaster, by which seventy-four persons lost their lives.

The wounded so far as can be estimated will number as many as 100.

Dropped Dead from Horror.

The manifestations of grief on the part of survivors who had near relatives buried in the mass of tangled wreckage, were of the most demonstrative nature peculiar to Celtic grief. The cries and bitter lamentations were heart-rending, and a car driver named Hughes who visited the scene dropped dead from horror and was carried back to his home in Armagh in his own car.

Train Men Under Arrest.

The engineer, fireman, and guard, of the rear section of the excursion train, and the traffic manager's clerk were arrested charged with causing the accident, and remanded without bail.

Cause of the Disaster.

There is no doubt that the disaster is primarily due to obsolete appliances, the brakes being the old-fashioned hand brakes with worn links.

THE WORK AT JOHNSTOWN.

Gen. Hastings in Charge and Systematic Work Mapped Out.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 13.—Gen. Hastings yesterday distributed the work to be performed among a number of contractors who are already prepared with men, teams and appliances to push the work with vigor. Gen. Hastings has proved himself equal to the occasion and if his plans are carried out the restoration of Johnstown is assured and that before very long. But very little outside work was accomplished yesterday, but by to-night the labor of clearing the wreck will have been resumed with determination. Col. H. T. Douglass, chief of the Baltimore and Ohio engineering corps, has reported to Gen. Hastings and tendered his services. After a consultation with Gen. Hastings, Col. Douglass was placed in charge of all of the engineering features connected with the task the state has undertaken.

Dividing Up the Work.

To facilitate matters the valley has been divided into districts. Number one includes Cambria City and all points below the railroad bridge down to Morrellville. Five hundred men in charge of Contractor Ridge, of Pittsburg, will work on this division. The gorge at the viaduct will be known as division No. 2, and will be cleaned up by James McKnight, of Pittsburg. Mr McKnight will use twenty hoisting engines, twenty teams, and 700 men to begin with. Nearly all of the city of Johnstown is included in division No. 3, and will be taken care of by Coburn & Mitchell, of Altoona, with F. Lafland engineer. Division No. 4 includes Conemaugh, and will be taken care of by McLain & Johnson, of Pittsburg. Kernville is the fifth district, and James McKnight has undertaken to clear it up.

Each district will be under the supervision of a competent civil engineer. Col. Douglass, the chief engineer in charge of the work, says the cost of clearing the valley won't be more than $500,000. He could not estimate just how long it would take.

Latest Estimate of the Lost.

The estimate of the dead, based on the census of the living, is now put at not many over 3,000.

NEEDED TO PREVENT FAMINE.

A Big Order for Food for the Deluged Valley Promptly Filled.

PITTSBURG, June 13.—Yesterday the following order was received from Commissary General Spangler at Johnstown: "Please ship at once 100,000 pounds of fresh bread, 20,000 pounds to be shipped each day for five days, 10,000 via Baltimore and Ohio, and 10,000 via Pennsylvania railway; 8,000 quart cans, half via Baltimore and Ohio, and half via Pennsylvania; 4,000 quart cans of corn, ditto; 10 barrels of vinegar, ditto; 2,000 boxes of pepper, ditto; 60 bushels of onions, ditto; 100 cheeses, ditto. The emergency is very great, and unless shipments begin at once there will be a famine in this entire valley."

The Requisition Promptly Filled.

Orders were placed within a few minutes for the entire amount of the requisition, amounting to about $8,000, and the first shipment was made yesterday afternoon. In this connection Mr. Reuben Miller remarked that such orders as this one furnished the best refutation needed of the reports current that there is a superabundance of supplies at Johnstown, and every reason why contributions should be continued right along for the present.

Contributions Continue to Come In.

Contributions to the relief fund continue to come in with encouraging regularity, but the amounts are growing smaller. Fear is expressed that the action of the governor in undertaking entire charge of the distribution of the funds will tend to interfere with subscriptions. Up to last night the amount received by the treasurer was $505,000.

The Laborers Paid Off.

The work of paying the workmen was completed at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. About $110,000 was distributed among them. Nearly all of them were provided with transportation to this city.

South Fork Viaduct Replaced.

ALTOONA, Pa., June 13.—The famous viaduct near South Fork, on the reconstruction of which 500 workmen have been engaged over a week, was completed yesterday afternoon, and at 6 o'clock the first engine crossed over it. The trestle is eighty-five fee high and 445 feet long. The rails have been laid for single track to Johnstown from the fork. Grading will be completed in two days more, when traffic is expected to be open through to Pittsburg.

Repairing the Railway.

Seven thousand men are at work on the middle division of the Pennsylvania railroad on the eight lost bridges and thirty-four miles of roadbed washed out. Work in the shops at this place has been stopped and all available forces are out on the line.

Competent authority computes the destruction in the Juniata valley at $7,000,000, fully half of which is on the Pennsylvania railroad.

FLAMES IN GRINNELL, IOWA.

Nearly the Whole of the Business Portion of the Town Burned.

GRINNELL, Ia., June 13.—Fire broke out at 12:30 yesterday in Treat & Co.'s elevator, on the town side of the Rock Island track, situated in the southwest part of town. A brisk wind was blowing from the southwest and the flames spread rapidly to adjacent buildings, and soon reached the heart of the business center of the town. The fire department was slow in getting into action and after water was finally turned upon the roaring flames it was powerless to stay their course.

Help Called for from Other Places.

Aid was summoned from Brooklyn and Marshalltown, but it was two hours in getting here, and was entirely too late to render assistance. Forty-one business houses were burned, comprising nearly all the business portion of the city. The losses so far foot up $160,000, and the insurance $15,000. The stocks of goods were largely saved, being piled up in the park and placed under guard of Company G, Third regiment, of state militia.

Four People Killed by a Train.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, June 13.—While crossing the Fort Wayne railway track at Louisville, near Canton, Ohio, yesterday afternoon, Lawrence and Edward Streb, Canton business men, and two Catholic orphans named Seifert, whom the Strebs had adopted, were struck by the limited express and all instantly killed.

CHICAGO, June 11.—The League played a full hand at base ball yesterday, every game coming off as advertised. The scores were: At Chicago—Chicago 3, Pittsburg 4—ten innings; at New York—New York 2, Boston 1; at Indianapolis—Indianapolis 2, Cleveland 4; at Washington City—(first game) Washington 6, Philadelphia 2; (second game) Washington 5, Philadelphia 7.

CHICAGO, June 13.—The weather was against the base ball experts yesterday, the New York-Boston, and Washington-Philadelphia games being postponed owing to rain. League scores made were: At Chicago—Chicago 5, Pittsburg 10; at Indianapolis—Indianapolis 10, Cleveland 3.

CHICAGO, June 14.—Yesterday's National league base ball scores were: At Chicago—Chicago 9, Pittsburg 8; at New York—New York 3, Philadelphia 2; at Boston—Boston 7, Washington 1; at Indianapolis—Indianapolis 1, Cleveland 4.

CHICAGO, June 15.—Anson took his "colts" to Cleveland Thursday night, and they met with another defeat at the hands of the "infants" yesterday. League scores were: At Cleveland—Cleveland 5, Chicago 4—seven innings—rain; at Indianapolis — Indianapolis 9, Pittsburg 13; at New York—New York 14, Philadelphia 4; at Boston—Boston 9, Washington 3.

Saturday's League games showed the following scores: At Cleveland—Cleveland 4, Chicago 5; at Boston—Boston 3, Washington 2—seven innings; at Indianapolis—Indianapolis 16, Pittsburg 11—ten innings; New York-Philadelphia game postponed—rain.

Double Lynching in Indiana.

CORYDON, Ind., June 15.—Two men named Devine and Tennyson, who last Tuesday murdered a farmer named Le May, near this place, were taken from jail last night by a mob and hung to the bridge just west of town.

Ravaged but Robust.

Seattle Is a Waste of Embers and Ashes.

BUT HER CITIZENS, UNDAUNTED,

Resolve to Make Her Rise More Enduring from Her Ruins—The Losses at Latest Accounts Reach Over $7,000,000, with Not One-Third Insured—Many of the People Destitute and Others Believed to Have Been Killed—A Wave of Flame a Mile Long—Relief Sent on.

SEATTLE, W. T., June 8.—The fire, which started in this city Thursday at 2:45 p m. was, when the size of the two cities is taken into account, nearly as destructive as that which swept over Chicago. And to-day Seattle is practically a bed of cinders and ashes. The city looks like some doomed Gomorrah. There are no streets in the burned district. It is all burning debris, with a few standing walls. What the loss in property is it is impossible at this writing to estimate, but it is roughly put at from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000, while the loss of life will also, it is believed, prove to be very great.

Where It Started.

The flames first broke out in a row of wooden buildings, and, like the Chicago fire, it was a woman's property that originated the conflagration. By some means a quantity of turpentine in a building at the southwest corner of Front and Madison streets, owned by Mrs. Margaret J. Peuster, took fire, and in an incredibly short space of time the flames were raging over the whole block. From the initial point the fire spread north and south, extending from Second and Third streets to the bay, a distance of over a mile, comprising the entire business portion of the city. The Western Union operators were driven out of their office with time only to save their instruments, and this caused the break in telegraphic communication. The instruments were taken outside of the city as rapidly as possible, and in a short time comparatively they were set up and communication re-established, the office being in a private residence. The burnt district comprises sixty-four acres.

Suffering Among the Poor.

There is great privation felt among the poor classes, as nearly every restaurant and grocery in the city has been consumed by the fire. The burnt district now presents the aspect of a huge oven of burning coals, and threaten even further destruction. The firemen, reinforced by the Tacoma and Snohomich departments, are on the alert. The streets and crowded with people wandering about penniless and homeless from the effects of the fire. The militia and extra police are to be seen on every corner guarding against thieves and vandals. The survivors of this fire will suffer terribly for want of the necessaries of life, and those whose homes and places of business are spared are generous in their offers to aid.

The Rush for the Hills.

When the fire became uncontrollable the people fled to the hills to the east, and horses flecked with foam dashed up to the highlands with promiscuous loads of everything attached to every available vehicle. Words fail to describe the awful picture of desolation. It is like the Chicago fire, but like Chicago the city will be rebuilt. Everybody seems in good spirits, as it is hard to realize the dreadful import of this sudden calamity.

Crushed Under Falling Buildings.

When the Foklas & Singerman building fell about thirty people were near it, and many of them were crushed. Similar accidents occurred at most of the large buildings.

One Block That Was Saved.

The magnificent Boston block, in which was the postoffice, is saved. The Canadian Pacific docks are gone and nearly everything from the head of Elliott bay to Union street. The Yesler avenue, Jackson street and Front street cable lines and electric motor line are useless, their tracks being badly damaged and many of their cars burned. All the warehouses are gone.

Going to Work Bravely.

Already in many places workmen have begun to grade and clean up lots preparatory to rebuilding. Many merchants have secured quarters in the residence portion of the city, and are open with remnants of their stocks from the fire. The people have decided to rebuild the city with brick and stone.

To preserve the richness of color or delicacy of tint of your summer dresses, make suds of hot water and IVORY SOAP, allow to cool until lukewarm, then wash your dresses in the solution. Ordinary soaps contain too much alkali, which in a short time bleaches the color and destroys its beauty. Prof. Silliman, of Yale College, says, "The IVORY SOAP can not injure the most delicate fabric."

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

Improved Champion Mower.

THE CHAMPION is the only Mower on which the pitman never wears out, the knife heel never breaks, the gears never wear out nor break; the only Mower on which the gears run slowly and make no noise; the bar can be stood straight up and the knife will run freely even in that position; the only Mower on which all lost motion can be taken up on pitman, gearing and boxing; the only Mower on which the guards will outwear three sets of the cheap guards used on other mowers, and never break nor get out of line; the only Mower on which the slightest forward motion of the master wheel starts the knife; the only Mower on which the motion is transmitted directly from the master wheel to the knife pitman without any joints to wear loose and rattle, and where ALL THE POWER is applied to cutting the grass, none being wasted on loose joints or fast running gearing; the only Mower that has no frame work or pitman hanging down in front to run into obstructions or interfere with the cut grass; the only Mower that has no clutches to bother by slipping out of gear, and it can be put in gear at any point without backing.

THE IMPROVED CHAMPION has less than one-third the amount of gearing that other Mowers have, and the pitman and its connections are warranted not to break or wear out. This Mower is so novel and so superior to all others that an examination will convince any farmer that it is worth much more than any other.

The Clan Responsible

Alex Sullivan in Jail for the Cronin Murder.

CLOSE OF THE CORONER'S INQUEST

A General Arraignment of the Clan-na-Gael and Four Men Named as Implicated in Cronin's "Removal."

O'Sullivan the Iceman, Dan Coughlin and Woodruff the Other Three—The Nationalist Lawyer Arrested at His Home and Lodged in Jail—His Imperturbable Coolness—Such Societies as the Clan Condemned as Injurious to American Institutions—The Testimony Heard—Cronin's Papers Read.

CHICAGO, June 12.—The Cronin inquest came to an end yesterday, and at 4:45 p. m. the jury retired. The testimony taken during the day was decidedly interesting in spots. The first witness called was John Garrity, brother of Senator Garrity, who gave a very damaging piece of testimony about a conversation he had with Dan Coughlin, in which Dan had asked him to get Maj. Sampson to do a job for him. The job consisted in doing a man up. If it should end in a murder it mattered not to Coughlin. Garrity said he had told Sampson, and later Sampson had informed him that Dr. Cronin was the man Coughlin wanted done up.

ALEX SULLIVAN.

Sullivan's Name Again.

John Haggerty gave the rather startling information that during 1885 he had a conversation with Alexander Sullivan, and during it Sullivan had told him that Cronin and other spies should, in the interest of the order, be exterminated. Haggerty also said that he knew Le Caron to have been connected with the trial of Cronin, and that he (Le Caron) enjoyed the confidence of Alexander Sullivan. Haggerty said that he himself believed, in 1885, that Cronin was a spy. He believed it because he "had Mr. Sullivan's ipse dixit for it." Sullivan had prosecuted at the trial of Cronin and Le Caron, of Parnell commission fame, was on the trial committee. The witness did not consider his oath to the Clan obligated him to "remove" any one at the order of the executive, but other men less intelligent might so consider it, as he believed now to his sorrow.

Cronin's Private Papers.

A loud buzz went through the court room when the chief concluded, and it was renewed when Coroner Hertz, holding up a small package, announced that he proposed to submit some of the private papers of the deceased. The most interesting of these—none of them bear directly on the murder or the motives for it except the statement that a protest of Alexander Sullivan against Cronin sitting on the committee which investigated Sullivan's administration of Irish affairs at Buffalo, had been overruled, Cronin voting against it among others—were the notes of the evidence before the Buffalo committee, in Cronin's handwriting.

"Active Work" in England.

They dealt with reports of men sent to do "active work" in England. One of the witnesses, supposed to be Luke Dillon, told how he was sent to England twice and each time was spotted by the Lond n detectives, presumably because they had been informed from this side. The taken money along was always of too small an amount and gave out. The unknown witness said that on the second trip they did four "operations" (dynamite, so it is supposed), and the agent (of the Clan) in England was put in prison for the work, although he did not do it. There were complaints in the testimony that Gen. Kerwin would not help raise money for the defense of dynamiters, saying that friendless men were better off. Among the men sent over to do "active work" were one Marony and Capt. Lomaskey, and Carroll, Kerwin, and Boland were scored for not taking care of the families of these men, whose wives and mothers were left in destitution. Mrs. Lomaskey testified that she had only received $1,000, and that when she asked Alexander Sullivan to aid her he neglected to do so. This ended the coroner's inquiry.

The Jury Retires to Deliberate.

The reading of the papers was concluded at 4:30 p. m., and Coroner Hertz then asked the jury if they had heard enough; if not, he said he had plenty more. The jury was satisfied, and the foreman moved that they retire to deliberate on their verdict. This was agreed to unanimously, and at 4:45 they filed into the coroner's private office, and the doors were closed and guards stationed to keep off intruders.

VERDICT OF THE JURY.

Alex. Sullivan, Coughlin, Woodruff, and O'Sullivan Named as Implicated.

It was within a few minutes of 10 o'clock when the foreman intimated that the jury had agreed upon a verdict. Only Coroner Hertz and a small knot of spectators were in the room. The verdict was read in slow and impressive tones.

[The first six paragraphs affirm the belief of the jury that Cronin was murdered as the result of a conspiracy, and recite the finding of the body, etc. The verdict then proceeds]:

7.—We have carefully inquired into the relations sustained by said Cronin to other persons while alive, to ascertain if he had any cause of enmity with any person sufficient to cause his murder.

8.—It is our judgment that no other person or persons except some of those who are or had been members of a certain secret society known as "United Brotherhood" or "Clan-na-Gael," had any cause to be instigators or executors of such plot or conspiracy to murder said Cronin.

9.—Many of the witness s testifying in the case have done so with much evident unwillingness and, as we believe, with much mental reservation. We find from the evidence that a number of persons were parties to this plot and conspiracy to murder the said Cronin, and that Daniel Coughlin, Patrick O'Sullivan, Alexander Sullivan, and one Woodruff, alias Black, were either principals, accessories, or had guilty knowledge of said plot and conspiracy to murder said Cronin and conceal his body, and they should be held to answer to the grand jury.

We also believe that other persons were engaged in the plot, or had guilty knowledge of it, and should be apprehended and held to the grand jury.

We further state that this plot, or conspiracy, in its conception and execution is one of the most foul and brutal that has ever come to our knowledge, and recommend that the proper authorities offer a large reward for the discovery and conviction of all of those engaged in it in any way.

We further state that, in our judgment, all secret societies, whose objects are such as the evidence shows that of the Clan-na-Gael or United Brotherhood to be, are not in harmony with, and are injurious to, American institutions.

Thirty Warrants Made Out.

It was reported in police circles last night that no less than thirty warrants were being made out for suspected accessories, all of which were to be served last night or to-day. The list is said to include John F. Beggs, Officer Dan Brown, Harry Jordan, Michael Boland, Lawrence R. Buckley, Peter McGeehan, D. C. Feeley, Frank Murray, J. J. Bradley, J. J. Conlon, and John Moss. It is also reported that a warrant will be issued for the arrest of Henry Le Caron, the English spy, and his extradition demanded. The majority of those named are prominent officers of the Clan-na-Gael.

The Times says: "That John J. Maroney, one of the men arrested in New York, is none other than the J. B. Simonds or Williams who rented the Carlson cottage would seem to be almost certain. It is also deemed certain that he is the man who rented the room at 117 Clark street Feb. 20, purchased the furniture at Revell's the following day, and rented the Ashland cottage March 20.

A Special Grand Jury Impaneled.

The special grand jury was impaneled at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning in Judge Shepard's court. In addressing the jury, Judge Shepard said that he expected a full, exhaustive, impartial investigation of the murder of Dr. Cronin. The entire resources of the county, he said, would be at the disposal of the grand jury and witnesses who would not testify should be made to do so. The grand jury had in its possession the power to make them do so. This is taken as meaning that the witness who "don't know" and "don't remember" will be subjected to the operation of the sweat box, the thumb-screw, the rack, and a few other such effective devices, which may strengthen their memory and develop their powers of speech.

ALEXANDER SULLIVAN JAILED.

The Noted Nationalist Arrested, but Not the Least Bit Excited.

Immediately upon the verdict being rendered Deputy Sheriffs Palmer, Broderick and Williams drove in a carriage to the residence of Alexander Sullivan on Oak street, in the north division. Even on this critical day the coolness which has characterized the noted Nationalist from the opening of the investigation remained with him. Although the jury had retired before he had left his law office under the shadow of the county building, and he knew full well that his arrest was inevitable before morning, he was in bed and sound asleep when the deputies arrived. They had expected to find him awaiting them and surrounded by his friends. Instead of this, his law clerk, Henry Brown, and the domestics were the only other occupants of the house.

Smiled at the Warrant.

He responded with alacrity to the summons and in a few minutes was up and dressed. He said nothing when the warrant was read, but with a smile accompanied the officers to the carriage. The party was rapidly driven to the county jail, where after the usual forms had been gone through Sullivan was placed in a cell on the ground floor, near where the Anarchists were incarcerated.

IN SULLIVAN'S FAVOR.

Judge Tuley Decides He Must Be Released on Bail.

CHICAGO, June 14.—Shortly after 4 o'clock Friday afternoon Judge Tuley decided that Alexander Sullivan must be released from jail upon furnishing proper security. The opinion was rendered by the court after he had finished the perusal of all the evidence tending to implicate Alexander Sullivan in the murder of Dr. Cronin, given before the coroner's jury. The court-room was packed, and when the decision was announced there was considerable excitement. A tendency to applaud, displayed by some of Sullivan's friends who were present, was quickly repressed by the bailiffs.

Bailed and at Liberty.

There was an argument between the state's attorney and Mr. Trude as to the amount of bail. The latter, who said Sullivan was almost entirely without means, thought $5,000 to $10,000 was sufficient. Finally $20,000 was agreed upon. The four gentlemen named swore to the aggregate possession of over $500,000 of real estate, the bonds were made out and signed, and Sullivan walked out of court a free man.

The grand jury spent several hours in hearing the witnesses who testified before the coroner, but nothing of importance was developed.

Two Arrests in New York.

NEW YORK, June 12.—On information received here by Inspector Byrnes, from Chicago, the inspector ordered the arrest yesterday of John Marony and Charles McDonald, for implication in the Cronin murder. They are held to await orders from Chicago. Inspector Byrnes, in an interview with a United Press reporter, said: "The arrests were made on a dispatch from Chicago signed by States Attorney Longenecker and Chief of Police Hubbard. I am awaiting instructions now." The above information was given by Inspector Byrnes without reservation, but he declined emphatically to go into further particulars. He described Maroney as being a fine-looking man of excellent address, and McDonald as one that a person would not like to encounter on a dark night in a lonely locality.

Sure Maroney Is the Man.

Hatfield, the furniture salesman, is almost positive that the photograph of Maroney, under arrest in New York, is that of the man to whom he sold the goods found in the Carlson cottage, while the expressman is absolutely certain that it was Maroney that hired his wagon and carried the articles into the cottage. The Chicago detectives with requisition papers will reach New York to-night.

Luke Dillon, in view of the coroner's jury's condemnation of the Clan-na Gael, says the clan must be reorganized, but would not say in what direction, while another clansman declared that the verdict was a smasher, and the clan must quit the dynamite business.

HIGH SCHOOL HAPPENINGS.

The reception that the Juniors gave the Seniors last Friday evening was a pleasant affair, and was enjoyed by all present. Dr. Howell, Prof. Wilson and Albert Howard, each gave short addresses, and the Juniors gave some fine quotations from the teachers and Seniors.

Our old schoolmate, Levi Hayden, returned from Boston last Saturday night. He visited our school Tuesday A. M.

Messrs Loree and Boyd went to Ypsilanti Monday.

Mr. Charles Hiscock of Ridgeway, spent Tuesday visiting the High School.

Miss Grace Burnett is on the sick list, but it is hoped she will soon recover.

The Philosophy class took their final examination Monday, the Chemistry class Tuesday and Geometry Friday.

HARVESTERS AND BINDERS.

There are several harvesting and binding machines in the market now, and the competition between them is waxing hot as harvest season approaches. Without disparaging other machines, we confidently assert that the Milwaukee Junior leads them all. In these FIVE particulars its superiority is unquestioned;

1. DURABILITY—In the construction of the Junior, the best material the country affords is used: skilled mechanics are employed in our factory, and each machine is thoroughly tested and inspected before shipment. We shall continue to furnish, regardless of expense, the most durable Harvester and Binder, and depend upon an appreciative and intelligent public to maintain the high standard of the Milwaukee Junior.

2. SIMPLICITY—Complication is a thing to be avoided in all kinds of machinery, and this has been effectually done in the Junior Harvester and Binder. In adding new features to our machine, it has always been our aim to simplify rather than complicate and in this way we have greatly reduced the number of wearing parts, thereby increasing its durability and lessening its draft.

3. EASE OF MANAGEMENT—In placing the levers, we have carefully considered the convenience of the operator, and so arranged them that he can put the machine in proper adjustment for cutting all kinds of grain without leaving his seat, and so easily are the different changes made that a boy who can guide the team can operate the Milwaukee Junior.

4. LIGHTNESS OF DRAFT—Our Junior is the first and still remains the only successful two-horse harvester and binder on the market, and is so acknowledged by all our competitors, its weight being only 1150 pounds.

5. PRICE—No other machine in the market of equal value is sold at so low a figure. Any farmer can test this assertion by pricing the different machines.

I invite the farmers of northern Lenawee to call at my headquarters—Williamson's poultry house—in Tecumseh, and examine this machine before placing their orders.

A NEW ENTERPRISE.

From a late copy of the Rochester N. H. Courier we clip the following, which will be of interest to the many old Tecumseh friends of Mr. H. C. Ingraham.

The Kiesel Fire Brick Company of Kittery, Me., a company incorporated in April, 1889, with a capital stock (unassessable) of $200,000, is negotiating for land on which to build a plant, and bring to Rochester a business giving employment to 150 men. The company has purchased fifty acres of land on the Miles Scruton farm on Blue Job, in which is a practically inexhaustable quantity of mica silex, capable of producing the most refractory fire brick, blast furnace, stove linings, etc., known to the trade, either in this country or Europe, as shown by the testimony of experts. Consumers are now obliged to look to foreign manufacturers for the highest perfection in fire brick, but it has been demostrated by the managers of this company that they can with this material make equally as good brick, at lower prices. Portsmouth is anxious to have the company locate there, but Rochester is more convenient for the raw material. Mr. H. C. Ingraham, who will act as superintendent of the company, has rented the Richard Cross house on Main street, and moved into it this week. The company would make 10,000 fire brick each day, besides crucibles and other articles for resisting great heat.

Since writing the above it has been decided definitely to locate here, and build a manufactory valued at $14 000, work to be commenced by June 1.

Fearful and Wonderful.

The Bible says, "man is fearfully and wonderfully made." But physiologists all concede that the most wonderful portion of man is the nervous system. In it are located the seats of life and mind, and the control of all the bodily organs. When the nerves are destroyed, the part is paralized. The flesh, blood and bones are as nothing to it. Derangement of the brain or nerves are causes of headache, fits, dizziness, fluttering of the heart, sexual weakness, sleeplessness, neuralgia, cold hands and feet. A free trial bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine—the latest and most successful cure for all these diseases may be had at Baker & Hall's.

Home Protection.

Written for the Tecumseh HERALD.

In these days of excitement and debate about the best methods of securing protection for our home industries, is it not well to give some thought to the protection to our homes.

"As a man thinketh in his heart so is he" is the verdict of more than three thousand years' experience, as well as of Divine inspiration, and as with the man so with the child. "Evil communications corrupt good morals," is another old proverb.

Now the principles of these truisms being admitted what shall we think of the thoughtlessness, not to say the criminal neglect, of those parents and guardians, who from week to week admit to their homes to be read and pored over by their children, those filthy scurrilous or sensational Sunday papers filled with the grossest allusions or innuendos, the exploits of highwaymen, robbers or murderers, elopements or illicit love stories and all the various grades of immorality. The land is full of this class of papers and publications thrown out broad cast to corrupt the morals of the community and prepare it for its annual carnival of crime. More than three thousand years ago the Sun worshiping Persians gave better heed to the culture and morals of their children, and where parents proved themselves unfit to bring them up in a manner to become good and useful citizens, the state took them from their control, and after their own methods took charge of their future training. Greece enacted severe laws for the punishment of any who should be found attempting to lead their children astray, and when the politicians wished to get rid of the noble Socrates, they falsely accused him and caused him to be sentenced to death under the charge of "corrupting the youth."

It was the proud assertion of the Roman Conscript and orator that "the Fathers had caused the statues and images of Rome's greatest generals and statesman to be set up in the forum and other public places, in order that their children by looking upon them might be led to admire and emulate their noble deeds." Now if these nations of old so understood the force of example and association and held it to be a crime against the state as well as the home, to attempt to corrupt the youth, shall this christian land standing at the very dawn of the twentieth century continue to look upon it with indifference? A man is known by the company he keeps and no less, surely, by the books and literature he selects and reads, and as with the man so with the child.

Parents should always remember this, and not only be very careful to set before their children such an example as they would wish them to imitate, and secure for them such associates as they would be willing to have them assimilate with, but also as well see to it that the character of the books and papers they are to read are such as they are willing to have influence the formation of their character, or give direction to their future lives. And in the meantime it is due to the protection of our homes as well as the wellfare of the state, that legislators should if necessary make stringent laws for the suppression of the publication of all such deleterious and impure literature or its circulation in the community.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas at a regular Communication of Tecumseh Chapter Royal Arch Masons, a resolution was offered and adopted that a committee be appointed to formulate an expression of the sense of this Chapter in regard to the death of our late companion, Richard Ford, and to express our sympathy to his bereaved family in their deep affliction, therefore

Resolved, That while we would submit in humble resignation to the will of Almighty God in taking the soul of our deceased brother out of this world, we would place upon record our deep sense of loss and personal bereavement for one who for many years was an esteemed and faithful companion in this Chapter. In all his intercourse with us and with his relations in society generally, we have learned to know him well, and to esteem him as a brother beloved, therefore

Resolved, That we will cherish his memory as a worthy companion whose conduct and many virtues exemplified the precepts which our order inculcates; that we may well strive to imitate his kindly disposition, his honest and truthful words, his fidelity to his engagements by which he secured to himself the affectionate esteem of all with whom he had to do.

Resolved, That we extend to his afflicted family our heartfelt sympathy in this their sad bereavement; and may the God of all comfort and consolation remember them in mercy, and endue their souls with patience and resignation in their sore distress, and help them to say the Lord is good, He doeth all things well, for His mercy endureth forever.

"There is a calm for those who weep,
A rest for weary pilgrims found;
They softly lie, and sweetly sleep,
Low in the ground.

The storm that wrecks the winter sky,
No more disturbs their deep repose
Than summer evening's latest sigh,
That shuts the rose.

There is a calm for those who weep,
A rest for weary pilgrims found;
And while the mouldering ashes sleep,
Low in the ground;

The soul of origin divine,
God's glorious image free'd from clay
In Heaven's eternal sphere shall shine
A star of day."

A FINE PRAIRIE FARM.

Business called us to Holloway the other day. We drove down, passing the beautiful farms of East Raisin and arrived at the village about eleven o'clock A. M. Having interviewed Mr. Osgood and the Begels and our friend Hoxsie at the foundry we started Eastward and hitched our horse in front of Ersk Wilson's, just before noon. An invitation to dine and feed the pony was accepted. During the conversation at dinner Mr. Wilson enquired "Where are you bound for to day, Stacy? Who are your victims now?" "We wish to call at a few places in this vicinity," we replied. "Well" said Mr. Wilson "I have a proposition to make. You look lonely and need company. I will jump in the buggy with you, pilot you round where you wish to go and take you down to see my prairie farm."

Within fifteen minutes thereafter the horse was headed eastward. Halting at three or four places on the way, we pulled up about three o'clock at Mr. Wilson's prairie farm. For a farm only two years old it is a fine exhibit of what well directed labor will accomplish. It is located about five miles directly east of Mr. Wilson's home farm, on the same road and contains 115 acres. He has already got in 30 acres of corn, 15 acres of oats and 30 acres of rye. If his plans do not fail, and he does not plan to fail, he will also crop 12 acres to buckwheat, 2 to celery, 5 to cabbage and 2 to beets before his seeding is finished. Nearly the whole farm is enclosed with wire fencing, and a new house is erected on the place. Silas Spelter, an employee, lives on the farm with his family and Will Wilson is spending most of his time there at present. The round trip consumed about five hours and we gathered more information than would fill a bushel basket. Mr. Wilson told us of some of his experiences in an early day; we learned the history of the Little Big Raisin drain; we found out the names of the best housekeepers and the prettiest girls in all that section; and — well — we might as well down up the corn, we sampled a pitcher full of Mr. Witt's cider—that is, "Ersk" sampled the most of it and we took a small glass ourselves for politeness' sake.

Ed Collin has a nice little place on the next road South, and he's going to build a new house this summer.

Robert McWilliams is running a large farm which keeps him busy.

Jerome Green is managing two farms now, but it doesn't seem to wear on him in the least.

Geo. Holloway is as happy and prosperous as ever and Uncle John Richards seems to be growing younger every day.

Taken altogether it was the pleasantest afternoon we have spent driving through the country in many a long day.

Congressman Allen was in Pittsford on Monday, appointing a postmaster In the evening Willis Upwood brought him to Hudson in his carriage. They drove direct to the Lake Shore depot, where the congressman was intending to take the fast train for Adrian. Both alighted, and as Allen was endeavoring to get out of an overcoat borrowed from Dr. Gier, he stuck his cane against the wheels of the carriage. The way Upwood's nag shot up Railroad Street must have reminded the representative of the campaign of '84, and he is supposed to have shouted, "Whoa, Eldredge!" The Captain wouldn't have concerned himself about the runaway horse probably, if the grip which he had left in the carriage hadn't contained a lot of petitions and other documents pertaining to the appointment of postmasters in certain bailiwicks. Of course he couldn't go on to Adrian with those precious papers sailing around the country; so he waited at the Comstock House in anxious suspense, while Willis procured a livery at Kellogg's and accompanied by Will Deacon set out to track the animal. At 2 a. m. they reported. they had followed the horse ten miles through Hudson Pittsford and Wheatland and found him safe at home, carriage, grip, and all. The buggy and harness were but slightly damaged. The Captain felt very much relieved upon recovering his documents; but it is a question, after the hours of intense anxiety, if he did not have some experience with the nightmare in his slumbers the balance of the night. He departed at 7 a. m. for Adrian to undergo still another siege, not with a fractious horse but with an army of office-seekers—HUDSON GAZETTE.

DETROIT'S INTERNATIONAL FAIR AND EXPOSITION.

A Magnificent Effort in Behalf of Art, Industry, Education and Amusement.

Combining a Wealth of Wonders with a World of Pleasure and Instruction—Representing a Grand Outlay of More Than Half a Million Dollars—Special Exhibits in All Departments and Curios from Many Climes—Sept. 17 to 27 Inclusive, the Ten Great Days of Display.

Memorable indeed in the history of Michigan's efforts in behalf of agriculture and its allied sciences will be the present season of 1889. For this is the year in which the great Wolverine state, with a dash of that enterprise which has made her name famous over the whole continent, will come before the agricultural community of the United States with an International Fair and Exposition that, with the exception of the famous Centennial of '76, it will positively surpass anything in the fair and exposition line our land has ever seen.

It is needless to speak of the generous influences which flow from such a gigantic project as that initiated at Detroit. Held at a season of the year when Nature arrays herself in her most gorgeous robes, when the harvests have all been gathered home, and when the industrious farmer is privileged to enjoy a period of well-earned rest—the fair has won a warm place in the hearts of those who esteem an attraction which combines interest with instruction, education with diversion.

MICHIGAN'S INTERNATIONAL FAIR AND EXPOSITION will lead the world for beauty and variety of display, for uniqueness of features, and for grandeur and extent of plant. The grounds, comprising seventy acres of beautiful rolling land, adjacent to the city, are already penetrated by railroad, street railway, electric road, and by steamboat from the river. The site affords a delightful view of the beautiful Detroit river, the picturesque Canadian shore, the neighboring islands, the great commerce of the Inland seas; far as the eye can reach, the proximate city, stretching forth its giant arms till they lose themselves beyond the horizon; Fort Wayne, with its martial sounds of drum and fife, its blue-coated troops moving to and fro, its frowning cannon peering from the bastioned redoubts; the immense warehouses, factories and docks along the river front, sending up great volumes of black smoke, resounding with the din of industry, and paying mute tribute to the wealth and prosperity of the beautiful city; the inviting shores of the famous Belle Isle park, blue in the dim distance, serve to complete as charming a scene as one could hope to view in many a long day's journey.

We present to-day a cut of the main building, which, with its companion structures, is being erected at the enormous cost of

TWO HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND DOLLARS.

It is the largest building erected and used exclusively for fair purposes in the world. In the form of a hollow square, the inner area is devoted to a series of beautifully embowered courts, in which the visitor, leisurely pursuing the winding paths, cannot but lose himself in delight at the rare vistas offered by this one small part of Detroit's great International Fair and Exposition. Before him are luxuriant beds of foliage and flowers, whose redolent perfumes are wafted by the same breeze which bears to his ears the soothing spell of music's softest strains. At his feet, perhaps, a cooling fountain is refreshing the perfume-laden air, and, softly murmuring as it flows, invites to reverie and gentle somnolence. The hot glare of the autumn sunlight is tempered by a so that even upon the warmest days the whole court is the most cool and refreshing spot imaginable. The same delightful scene may likewise be viewed while strolling about the spacious galleries above, or while reclining at one's ease in the cozy smokers' alcove.

MAGNIFICENT CANOPY OF TRANSLUCENT GLASS,

A ramble about the seventy-acre grounds will at once reveal the bewildering prodigality of exhibits, the varied character of the attractions. A space fifteen acres in extent, regularly laid out in walks and drives, will be devoted to an immense display of agricultural implements, engines, wind-mills and calliopes, sheltered under commodious private structures, or under gay tents fluttering with the flags of all nations. A gigantic building, 300 feet long, will be devoted to the interests of fowls and home pets. Did you ever hear a delegation of roosters crow? Leading the choir with a hoarse guttural croak is the big Brahma, the hundreds of less favored fowls joining in the chorus, while the little bantam, high on tiptoe and fairly bursting with excitement, is doing his best to maintain his place in the race for the blue ribbon. You have heard a dog howling at the moon, or have, no doubt,

HURLED A BOOTJACK AT A MIDNIGHT TOM-CAT,

But a bench show canine, ambitious for the first prize, can easily outdo them all. It will be a magnificent exhibition of dogs. Here are prize animals from all parts of the country.

Among the very finest in the country are the stock buildings of Detroit's great Fair and Exposition. Each over 300 feet square, the four contain stalls enough that, were they placed side by side, they would extend over two miles. A large inner court is daily crowded with a display of magnificent animals, competing for their prizes.

A place of great interest to the majority of fair-goers will be the art building, a beautiful structure, 150 feet frontage, filled with

RARE ART TREASURES FROM MANY LANDS.

One hundred thousand dollars are represented in the display; and here one may gain a vast amount of interesting and instructive art information in the brief visit of one afternoon

Nor have we as yet seen the world's greatest fair and exposition in its entirety. For, while the grand display is under examination; while the machinery hall is resounding with its immense array of engines, machines and scientific models; while the floral palace is inviting thousands to come and revel in its unrivaled beauties; while the long line of agricultural and industrial halls, the displays in the palm garden, the art gallery and the regular departments are in full movement—the rare sporting events, polo, lacrosse, base ball, and a thousand contests of strength and skill, are being continued each day from dawn till dark.

Another year has passed and many of the old pioneers have laid down the burdens and struggles of a long, weary earthly life and passed on to a brighter and more congenial clime, but old Mrs. Woodard is still with us and after a long and serious illness has again rallied and passed her 93rd. birthday surprisingly comfortable, cheerful and happy and was kindly remembered by her friends in the presentation of floral and other gifts, and that she may be blessed with good health while she is permitted to stay is the wish of all.

THE WALTER A. WOOD BINDER.

Some of our competitors are saying that the Walter A. Wood single apron binder is a failure. The proof of the pudding, however, is in the eating. What do the farmers say? Read. They say it excels all others in

1. Elevating qualities.
2. Lightness of Draft.
3. Certainty of Tying.
4. Quality of Work.
5. It is the simplest and strongest.
6. It is the most economical.
6. The bundle carrier improvement.

The last improvement alone is a very important item as it saves the expense of one harvest hand. Although this section is already well supplied with harvesters, I am selling a large number of the Walter A. Wood machines. Farmers who pay out their money for an expensive article want the best the market affords and the Wood binder fills the bill every time. The company have a stack of testimonials large enough to fill a bank safe, coming from Maine to Texas, written by farmers, who use them, commending the Wood single apron binder. Call on me before you buy.

The members of the Alumni will doubtless turn out in full force as it will be a program well worth listening to.

We clip the following from the Bay Shore Journal published at Bay Shore, Long Island, which will interest Dr. Aten's acquaintances in this vicinity.

Bay Shore is to have another physician for the summer months in the person of Dr. Wm. H. Aten, a nephew of Dr. F. H. Aten, who has been a visitor here for years past and is this year in the J. J. Chapman cottage on Bay Shore Ave. Dr. Wm. H. Aten will probably assist his uncle in his extensive Brooklyn practice and thus enable that gentleman to come to Bay Shore and get much needed rest. We shall probably hear from some of the exploits of Dr. H. F. Aten's homing pigeons this season. His pigeon loft in Brooklyn is known the country over and his birds have made some noted flights. Last summer several birds were liberated from Southampton, and all but one made the trip to Brooklyn in about two hours. One was missing and has only within a few weeks returned home, it being a conjecture as to where it has been for fully nine months and a marvel that its memory of home should have led it finally to its birthplace.

(Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of B. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.)

After the Sabbath was past.

After His death at 6 o'clock on Friday afternoon, Joseph of Arimathæa, who was also a counsellor, but a good and just man waiting for the kingdom of God, and had not consented to the action of the council respecting Jesus (for he was secretly a disciple of Jesus), went boldly to Pilate and begged the body of Jesus, and having received it, he and Nicodemus wrapped it in linen with about an hundred pounds of myrrh and aloes, and laid it in his own new tomb hewn out in the rock, wherein never man before was laid, and rolled a great stone to the door. The women who came with Jesus from Galilee watched these proceedings, then returned and prepared spices and ointments and rested the Sabbath day, according to the commandment. Pilate, at the request of the Jews, caused the stone to be sealed, and set a watch until after the third day, lest the disciples should steal Him away, for they remembered that He had said: "After three days I will rise again." (Matt. xxvii, 57-66; Luke xxiii, 50-56; John xix, 38-42.) Is it not strange that the unbelieving Jews in this case remembered more than the disciples, for although He had repeatedly said that He would rise again the third day, they seem not to have believed it nor thought of it.

2. "And very early in the morning, the first day of the week, they came unto the sepulchre at the rising of the sun." What a dark Sabbath it must have been to them.

3. "They said among themselves, Who shall roll us away the stone from the door of the sepulchre?" They evidently expected to find everything just as they saw Joseph and Nicodemus leave it on the evening before the Sabbath, and they seem not to have known of the sealing of the stone nor of the watch that had been set. How much better they kept the Sabbath than Christians now keep the day which we call Sabbath, for if anything unusual has happened, our Monday papers report that "Yesterday the place was visited by thousands," and we all know that among the thousands so called Christians were not lacking.

4. "And when they looked they saw that the stone was rolled away; for it was very great." The fact that they went on though believing the stone to be in their way, teaches us of the love that rises above all difficulties; and the fact that the stone was gone when they got there reminds us that difficulties vanish as we go forward.

5. "And entering into the sepulchre they saw a young man sitting on the right side, clothed in a long white garment; and they were affrighted." In Luke xxiv, 4, we read of two men in shining garments. While in pictures of angels which we are accustomed see, they are always represented as women with long flowing hair, the Scriptures speak of them as men (Gen. xviii, 2; xix, 16; xxxii, 24; Josh. v, 13; Judg. xiii, 6, etc.)

6. "And he saith unto them, Be not affrighted." So said the angel to Hagar and Mary, to Zacharias and the shepherds (Gen. xxi, 17; Lu. i, 30, 13; ii, 10); and from the first "Fear not" to Abram, to the last to John (Gen. xv, 1; Rev. i, 17), what comfort indescribable this word from heaven brought to sinful, trembling humanity; and today it comes with as much power as ever to every penitent soul who sincerely looks to Jesus, saying, "Fear not, for I am with thee."

7. "But go your way; tell His disciples and Peter that He goeth before you into Galilee: there shall ye see Him, as He said unto you." Everything always has been, is, and shall be just as he says.

8. "And they went out quickly, and fled from the sepulchre," etc. In Matt. xxviii, 8, it is written that "with fear and great joy they did run to bring His disciples word." Mark, in this verse, evidently implies that on their way to the disciples they said nothing to any one, but were filled with trembling and amazement, fear and joy, as they fled along; their unbelief now revealed to them would cause them fear and amazement, while the fact that Jesus was risen would fill them with joy.

9. "He appeared first to Mary Magdalene." The other women had seen the empty tomb, and had been assured by the angels that He was risen, but this Mary is the one to see Himself and speak to Him and hear Him.

10. "And she went and told them that had been with Him, as they mourned and wept." Before she saw the Saviour that morning she had been to the tomb, seen the empty sepulchre, run and told Peter and John, and then evidently returned, hoping to find some trace of His body, like the others not looking for His resurrection; but now she had seen Him. He had spoken to her and said, "Go to my brethren and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father; and your Father; and to my God and your God" (John xx, 17); and this is the message which she bears from Him.

11. "And they, when they had heard that He was alive, and had been seen of her, believed not." In Luke xxiv, 11, it is written that their words seemed to them as idle tales, and they believed them not. It may be that their own unbelief on this occasion often recurred to them as in after days they had to deal with the same dullness and slowness of heart in others.

12. "After that He appeared in another form unto two of them, as they walked, and went into the country." After he appeared to Mary Magdalene it would seem that He ascended to the Father, then quickly returned and appeared to the other women (Matt. xxviii, 9, 10), after which he made the appearance recorded in this verse to the two as they walked to Emmaus. Who these two were we know not; inasmuch as He appeared to Simon Peter some time during this first day (Luke xxiv, 34; I Cor. xv, 5) we might suppose that these two were James and John; or since a special appearance to James is recorded (I Cor. xv, 7) it might be John and some other, for it would seem strange indeed if He did not appear to John who stood by His cross and to whom He committed Mary His mother; but we have no authority, we must wait patiently and some day we shall know.

13. "And they went and told it unto the residue, neither believed they them." Jesus walked with the two to Emmaus, and being constrained by them, went in to abide with them, and in breaking of bread was revealed to them, and vanished out of their sight; they rose up at once and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together (what seems to spoil our supposition that John was one of the two, but not conclusively) and told them all that had happened, with the result stated in this verse of our lesson; and according to the next verse (which may possibly refer to His appearance eight days later) He appears suddenly in the midst of the disciples gathered together in the city of Jerusalem and upbraids them with their unbelief and hardness of heart, because they believed not them which had seen Him after He was risen. There is nothing so grievous as unbelief and nothing that so abounds among His professed followers and especially in connection with the glorious truths associated with resurrection.

You should read THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS because you can afford it. Price doesn't stand in the way. It's really the cheapest thing on earth. One cent means practically nothing—until you spend it. Then you may make it mean a great deal, according as you invest it. A thing is cheap if it costs little, and is worth much. THE DAILY NEWS is like a telegraph from the whole world to your brain. To keep it in constant working order costs you but one cent a day. That's why it's cheap—because it renders a great service for an insignificant price.

Remember—Its circulation is 220,000 a day—over a million a week—and it costs by mail 25 cts. a month, four months $1.00,—one cent a day.

The commanders of the torpedo boats had orders to direct their swift messengers of destruction first against the crabs, for these vessels were far in advance of the repeller, and coming on with a rapidity which showed that they were determined upon mischief. If a torpedo, shot from a torpedo boat, and speeding swiftly by its own powers beneath the waves, should strike the submerged hull of a crab, there would be one crab the less in the English channel.

As has been said, the Llangaron came rushing on, distancing everything, even the torpedo boats. If, before she was obliged to lower her cylinder, she could get near enough to the almost stationary repeller to take part in the attack on her, she would then be content to slacken speed and let the crabs nibble awhile at her stern.

Two of the latest constructed and largest crabs, Q and R, headed at full speed to meet the Llangaron, who, as she came on, opened the ball by sending a "rattler" in the shape of a 500-pound shot into the ribs of the repeller, then at least four miles distant, and immediately after began firing her dynamite guns, which were of limited range, at the roofs of the advancing crabs.

There were some on board the repeller who, at the moment the great shot struck her, with a ringing and clangor of steel springs, such as never was heard before, wished that in her former state of existence she had been some other vessel than the Tallapoosa.

But every spring sprang back to its place as the great mass of iron glanced off into the sea. The dynamite bombs flew over the tops of the crabs, whose rapid motions and slightly exposed surfaces gave little chance for accurate aim, and in a short time they were too close to the Llangaron for this class of gun to be used upon them.

As the crabs came nearer, the Llangaron lowered the great steel cylinder which hung across her stern, until it lay almost entirely under water, and abaft of her rudder and propeller blades. She now moved slowly through the water, and her men greeted the advancing crabs with yells of defiance, and a shower of shot from machine guns.

The character of the new defense which had been fitted to the Llangaron was known to the syndicate, and the directors of the two new crabs understood the heavy piece of work which lay before them. But their plans of action had been well considered, and they made straight for the stern of the British ship.

It was, of course, impossible to endeavor to grasp that great cylinder with its rounded ends; their forceps would slip from any portion of its smooth surface on which they should endeavor to lay hold, and no such attempt was made. Keeping near the cylinder, one at each end of it, the two moved slowly after the Llangaron, apparently discouraged.

In a short time, however, it was perceived by those on board the ship, that a change had taken place in the appearance of the crabs: the visible portion of their backs was growing larger and larger; they were rising in the water. Their mailed roofs became visible from end to end, and the crowd of observers looking down from the ship were amazed to see what large vessels they were.

Higher and higher the crabs arose, their powerful air pumps working at their greatest capacity, until their ponderous pincers became visible above the water. Then into the minds of the officers of the Llangaron flashed the true object of this uprising, which to the crew had seemed an intention on the part of the sea devils to clamber on board.

If the cylinder were left in its present position the crab might seize the chains by which it was suspended, while if it were raised it would cease to be a defense. Notwithstanding this latter contingency, the order was quickly given to raise the cylinder, but before the hoisting engine had been set in motion Crab Q thrust forward her forceps over the top of the cylinder and held it down. Another thrust, and the iron jaws had grasped one of the two ponderous chains by which the cylinder was suspended.

The other end of the cylinder began to rise, but at this moment Crab R, apparently by a single effort, lifted herself a foot higher out of the sea; her pincers flashed forward, and the other chain was grasped.

The two crabs were now placed in the most extraordinary position. The overhang of their roofs prevented an attack on their hulls by the Llangaron, but their unmailed hulls were so greatly exposed that a few shot from another ship could easily have destroyed them. But as any ship firing at them would be very likely to hit the Llangaron, their directors felt safe on this point.

Three of the foremost ironclads, less than two miles away, were heading directly for them, and their rams might be used with but little danger to the Llangaron, but, on the other hand, three swift crabs were heading directly for these ironclads.

It was impossible for Crabs Q and R to operate in the usual way. Their massive forceps, lying flat against the top of the cylinder, could not be twisted. The enormous chains they held could not be severed by the greatest pressure, and if both crabs backed at once they would probably do no more than tow the Llangaron stern foremost. There was, moreover, no time to waste in experiments, for other rams would be coming on, and there were not crabs enough to attend to them all.

No time was wasted. Q signaled to R and R back again, and instantly the two crabs, each still grasping a chain of the cylinder, began to sink. On board the Llangaron an order was shouted to let out the cylinder chains, but as these chains had only been made long enough to allow the top of the cylinder to hang at, or a little below, the surface of the water, a foot or two of length was all that could be gained.

The davits from which the cylinder hung were thick and strong, and the iron windlasses to which the chains were attached were large and ponderous, but these were not strong enough to withstand the weight of two crabs with steel armored roofs, enormous engines and iron hull. In less than a minute one davit snapped like a pipe stem under the tremendous strain, and immediately afterward the windlass to which the chain was attached was torn from its bolts and went crashing overboard, tearing away a portion of the stern rail in its descent.

Crab Q instantly released the chain it had held, and in a moment the great cylinder hung almost perpendicularly from one chain. But only for a moment. The nippers of Crab R still firmly held the chain, and the tremendous leverage exerted by the falling of one end of the cylinder wrenched it from the rigidly held end of its chain; and in a flash, the enormous stern guard of the Llangaron sunk, end foremost, to the bottom of the channel.

In ten minutes afterward the Llangaron, rudderless, and with the blades of her propellers shivered and crushed, was slowly turning her starboard to the wind and the sea and beginning to roll like a log of 8,000 tons.

Besides the Llangaron three ironclads were now drifting broadside to the sea. But there was no time to succor disabled vessels, for the rest of the fleet was coming on and there was great work for the crabs.

Against these enemies, swift of motion and sudden in action, the torpedo boats found it almost impossible to operate, for the British ships and the crabs were so rapidly nearing each other that a torpedo sent out against an enemy was more than likely to run against the hull of a friend. Each crab sped at the top of its speed for a ship, not only to attack, but also to protect itself.

Once only did the crabs give the torpedo boats a chance. A mile or two north of the scene of action a large cruiser was making her way rapidly toward the repeller, which was still lying, almost motionless, four miles to the westward. As it was highly probable that this vessel carried dynamite guns, Crab Q, which was the fastest of her class, was signaled to go after her. She had scarcely begun her course across the open space of sea before a torpedo boat was in pursuit. Fast as was the latter, the crab was faster, and quite as easily managed. She was in a position of great danger, and her only safety lay in keeping herself on a line between the torpedo boat and the gunboat, and to shorten as quickly as possible the distance between herself and that vessel.

CAERDAFF BEFORE THE BOMBARDMENT.

If the torpedo boat shot to one side in order to get the crab out of line, the crab, its back sometimes hidden by the tossing waves, sped also to the same side. When the torpedo boat could aim a gun at the crab and not at the gunboat, a deadly torpedo flew into the sea, but a tossing sea and a shifting target were unfavorable to the gunner's aim. It was not long, however, before the crab had run the chase which might so readily have been fatal to it, and was so near the gunboat that no more torpedoes could be fired at it.

Of course the officers and crew of the gunboat had watched with most anxious interest the chase of the crab. The vessel was one which had been fitted out for service with dynamite guns, of which she carried some of very long range for this class of artillery, and she had been ordered to get astern of the repeller and to do her best to put a few dynamite bombs on board of her.

The dynamite gunboat, therefore, had kept ahead at full speed, determined to carry out her instructions if she should be allowed to do so, but her speed was not as great as that of a crab, and when the torpedo boat had given up the chase, and the dreaded crab was drawing swiftly near, the captain thought it time for bravery to give place to prudence. With the large amount of explosive material of the most tremendous and terrific character which he had on board, it would be the insanity of courage for him to allow his comparatively small vessel to be racked, shaken and partially shivered by the powerful jaws of the oncoming foe. As he could neither fly nor fight, he hauled down his flag in token of surrender, the first instance of the kind which had occurred in this war.

When the director of Crab Q, through his lookout glass, beheld this action on the part of the gunboat, he was a little perplexed as to what he should next do. To accept the surrender of the British vessel and to assume control of her, it was necessary to communicate with her. The communications of the crabs were made entirely by black smoke signals, and these the captain of the gunboat could not understand. The heavy hatches in the mailed roof, which could be put in use when the crab was cruising, could not be opened when she was at her fighting depth and in a tossing sea.

A means was soon devised of communicating with the gunboat. A speaking tube was run up through one of the air pipes of the crab, which pipe was then elevated some distance above the surface. Through this the director hailed the other vessel, and as the air pipe was near the stern of the crab, and therefore at a distance from the only visible portion of the turtle back roof, his voice seemed to come out of the depths of the ocean.

The surrender was accepted, and the captain of the gunboat was ordered to stop his engines and prepare to be towed. When this order had been given the crab moved round to the bow of the gunboat, and grasping the cutwater with its forceps, reversed its engines and began to back rapidly toward the British fleet, taking with it the captured vessel as a protection against torpedoes while in transit.

An Imperative Necessity

What pure air is to an unhealthy locality, what spring cleaning is to the neat house-keeper, so is Hood's Sarsaparilla to everybody, at this season. The body needs to be thoroughly renovated, the blood purified and vitalized, the germs of disease destroyed. Scrofula, Salt Rheum, and all other blood disorders are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla, the most popular and successful spring medicine.

WHY IS IT

That people linger along always complaining about that continual tired feeling? One bottle of BEGG'S PURIFIER and BLOOD MAKER will entirely remove this feeling, give them a good appetite and regulate digestion.

J. J. Orr, Druggist.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we receive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

WRITING MACHINE CABINET and OFFICE DESK

For Remington, Hammond, and Crandall Type Writer.

The advantages of this Type-writer and Office Desk over all other so-called Combination Cabinets, are:

First.—The ease and simplicity with which the desk is changed from a Library or Office Desk to a Type-writer Table. This change is effected by pushing the lid covering the machine back in the rear of cabinet—it being a roller top—removing it entirely from sight, thus overcoming the objectionable board and sounder in front of the operator. The movable top is perfectly flat, as board covered, and forms a complete writing desk when the machine is not in use. The table on which the machine rests is so evenly balanced by our patent adjustments that it needs but a slight touch to bring the machine in position.

Second.—The advantages of the swinging table are: The table is so balanced near its center on patent malleable iron arms, that when the machine brought in place for use, it does not depend on ropes or hangers at rear of platform for support, but is held rigidly in place by its own weight, making it impossible for the machine to be turbled down an incline in back of desk by the breaking of a rear support. The machine rests on patent slides which keep the machine in place, and can be drawn out beyond the desk, well under the operator's hand.

Third.—The construction of the lid closing machine space makes it air tight, and the table having felt around its borders thoroughly protects the machine from dust.

Fourth.—The foot rest and the construction of the table adjustments makes the desk as rigid as though the top was one solid board, which is a matter of great importance where a solid type-writing table is required. No operator can do good work on a shaky table.

Lastly.—The cabinet is a splendid piece of cabinet work. We manufacture them in Walnut, Antique Oak, Natural Oak, Natural Cherry, Cherry imitation, Mahogany and Ash.

Agents wanted to sell these cabinets, and where we have no agencies established we will sell direct from our works at wholesale prices.

31 YEARS AGO

the Threshing Machines then in use were almost wholly of the class known as the "Endless Apron" style. Then it was that Nichols & Shepard, of Battle Creek, Mich., invented and began to develop an entirely new and novel style of Grain Thresher and Separator, which they very appropriately named the "Vibrator."

It was a revolution in Threshing Machines, and from a small beginning of five machines in 1858 they soon reached a product of 1,000 yearly.

Their Vibrator drove the "Endless Apron" machine out of market, and all other makers copied it as closely as they dared. To-day all Threshing Machines of any reputation or merit use the principles of the old Vibrator. Nichols & Shepard have continued in the business without change of name, location, or management; and during the past three years have brought out and developed another new Threshing Machine for grain and seeds, as superior to all existing machines as their former was to the "Endless Apron." They name this new and improved Thresher and predict as great a revolution in the trade, and as complete success over all rivals as they had thirty-one years ago.

MICHIGAN MONUMENTS.

Dedication on the Gettysburg Field—Governor Luce Present.

GETTYSBURG, Pa., June 13.—The Michigan monuments of this battle-field were dedicated yesterday. The exercises, on account of the rain, were held in the rink, Gen. Pierce acting as master of ceremonies. The opening prayer was made by Rev. William C. Way, chaptain of the Twenty-fourth Michigan. The exercises consisted of an address on the Michigan troops at Gettysburg, presentation addresses, etc. Governor Luce, Gen. Trowbridge, Hon. Edward McPherson, and Hon. Austin Blair took part in the ceremonies. Gen. Alger sat on the platform during the execercises, but took no part in the proceedings. All the monuments are of granite and as a whole equal to those of any state on the field. That of the cavalry brigade is the largest and costliest thus far erected.

Michigan Legislature.

LANSING, Mich., June 12.—The senate yesterday passed a resolution for final adjournment June 25. The house will concur. The house passed a bill which sets apart the middle grounds between Moisan island, in Saginaw bay, and the mainland as public shooting and fishing grounds. A resolution appropriating $10,000 for the Johnstown sufferers was introduced in the senate, but it was referred to the judiciary committee on the ground that the constitution would not permit the legislature to extend aid outside the state.

LANSING, Mich., June 13.—A warrant for the arrest of George W. Walthew, chief of the Rhines ballot-box lobbyists, was sworn out, but Walthew could not be found, yesterday. The house passed bills appropriating $27,000 for an asylum for feeble-minded children; forbidding the display of indecent pictures. The senate passed a bill repealing the act of of 1887 which authorized trial judges to forbid divorced persons from marrying again within two years after the date of the decree. It also passed the bill increasing the bounty on English sparrows from 1 to 3 cents.

LANSING, Mich., June 15.—The senate yesterday passed an anti-rebate insurance bill, which is intended to prevent discrimination in rates and compel the giving of the same rates to small policy holders as are given to larger ones. Both houses passed a joint resolution releasing to the United States all interest Michigan may have had in the unearned lands granted to Michigan for aid in the construction of certain railroads in the upper peninsula. This embraces the Ontonagon lands. The senate has passed house bills providing for the relief of soldiers and their families outside of the soldier's home, and another providing for the holding of an election on the question of the calling of a convention for the purpose of remodeling the state constitution.

Horrible Death of a Lake Captain.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Mich., June 12.—Capt. William J. Trinter of the steamer Onoko of Cleveland met with an accident which resulted in his almost instant death at 8 p. m., on the 8th inst., when forty miles out from Ashland. While supervising the hoisting of canvas his overcoat caught in the drum of the pony, and his body was drawn into the turns of the hoisting line, making four revolutions and crushing the skull at each revolution of the winch. The Onoko arrived here at 2 o'clock Monday morning in charge of Capt. John Sweeney, first officer, who will take her to her port of destination—Sandusky. Capt. Trinter had a $20,000 interest in the steamer, and had been in the employ of the Minches of Cleveland for the last twenty years.

TERRIBLE ACCIDENT IN MEXICO.

The Roof of a Market House Caves in—Hundreds of People Crushed.

CITY OF MEXICO, June 15.—The roof of the market fell in Saturday while the building was crowded with dealers and customers. Hundreds were caught in the ruins and are still buried there. Many were instantly crushed to death. Troops have been called out and have been set to work digging out the dead and rescuing the living. So far eight corpses have been taken from the ruins and fourteen wounded persons have been recovered. Many more are missing. Not more than one-third of the ruins has been explored. The market is surrounded by a frantic crowd. The scenes of distress are heart-rending.

Governor Hill for President.

ST. LOUIS, June 15.—The Republic (Democratic) prints an entire page devoted to the opinions of Democratic editors as to the advisability of Governor Hill of New York as the Democratic standard-bearer in the presidential contest of 1892. The newspapers to which the query was addressed circulate in ten states where Democratic opinion is strongly represented by them. There is but one expression in favor of the nomination of Governor Hill, coming from The Augusta (Ga.) Chronicle, a protection paper. Of the others all but two are unqualifiedly opposed to the nomination of Hill. The two exceptions are The Louisville Courier-Journal and Atlanta (Ga.) Journal. Mr. Watterson simply declines to commit himself to an opinion now.

$100 REWARD. $100.

The readers of the HERALD will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucus surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength, by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address,

A GENEROUS OFFER.—The celebrated Dr. Gleason, after a practice of forty years, having during all that time made the cure of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption his special study, has in this time so perfected his treatment as to be able to cure nearly all who suffer from these complaints. Having reached the age of seventy years, he realizes that the time is near at hand when these valuable remedies must be in other hands or become lost to the world. Desiring that his Home Treatment should be within the reach of all, he has placed the prescriptions with the Hall Chemical Company; this company, knowing the wonderful success of the Home Treatment in the cure of all Throat and Lung Troubles, have decided to send the full treatment on TRIAL to any one who wishes to try it. Dr. Gleason has also written a valuable treatise on these diseases, which is profusely illustrated with finely executed wood-cuts, showing the Head, Throat and Lungs as they are when diseased; it discusses in an able manner the cause and cure of these complaints; it is printed on heavy super-calendered paper and handsomely bound. This book, together with full instructions how to order on trial, will be sent free to all who will write and ask for it. Address

The Single Apron Improvement.

Its striking advantages are—three rollers as compared with six; one canvas versus three; six bearings as compared with twelve; three buckles versus twelve. The draft of the machine is thereby very materially reduced. The apron is driven from the underside, hence the upper side or top of apron is comparatively loose and easily passes, without friction, under the apron guides.

The only Binder adjustments on the Wood are the three desirable ones—Regulating size of Bundle—Regulating tightness of Binding—Regulating position of Band. Each of these adjustments is made instantly.

FRANKLIN UNION LITERARY & LYCEUM.

At last after rainy Saturday nights innumerable, the weather bureau designed to send us one without storm, June 15th, and a goodly company assembled at Mr. L. E. Taylor's to witness the exercises of the occasion and enjoy the pleasures of a few hours of social chat. A good part of the program as published was presented. Sadie and Edie Taylor sang "List to the Convent Bells" a storm of applause following. Addie and Bertha Lamkin sang a sweet little song. Of the instrumental music it is only necessary to mention the names of Mrs. Wm. Witherell, Seth Simmons and Ed. Spaulding as the chief performers, to assure those familiar with their playing that it was very fine. Of the recitations we must say that all were good and well delivered. S. N. Munger, Ed. Spaulding, Lena Witherell, Cicil Billington, Lulu Taylor were among the reciters, and when Lulu's name is on the program we all know we shall hear something well worth making an effort to hear. Cecil is another fine speaker. Ed. Spaulding told a tale of a man who went fishing and lost his watch, and twenty years after, fishing on exactly the same spot he caught a monstrous salmon, took it home and insisted that his wife should cook it. Of course the audience knew he would find his lost watch in the fish, but they ate the fish and that was all (Sensation.) Miss Butrick, a visitor, also favored the society with a finely rendered comic recitation.

At the close of the literary exercises Mrs. L. E. Taylor read an original poem.

After a short recess the question, Resolved, That the United States does not lead in Science, Art and Improvement, was discussed. The question had excited much interest in the minds of the debaters, and a whole evening should have been given to it. As it was very little could be said in the short space of time remaining. Two among the best debaters were absent, G. W. Allen and Thomas Conlin, nevertheless it was resolved to put it off no longer. The speakers on the Aff. were J. S. Allen, Mrs. A. B. Wisner, S. N. Munger, Mrs. S. Munger. The Neg. had but two, Holis Taylor and L. E. Taylor.

The Aff. held that in the arts and science Europe pre-eminently led, if not why did the U. S. send her students, artists, musicians, literary men to Europe to finish their education, or, why did they go in later years to study, observe and practice. (Neg—Colleges and institutions of learning naturally accumulate in an old country.) They spoke of her vast treasures of art, her pictures, statuary and architecture. S. N. Munger instanced the fact of getting our fashions from Paris as evidence of our non-leadership in improvements. Our buildings, our fine residences the homes of the wealthy are of European pattern; we have not originality to invent anything absolutely new in architecture. One secret of the east which we had never been able to solve, or successfully imitate was the fire-cracker; another, of Russia's, which we had long coveted in vain was the famous Russia iron. Another secret of great value was one possessed by a German establishment for a dressing of leather much used in the manufacture of organs.

In answering these arguments Mr. L. E. Taylor stood practically alone, Mr. Holis Taylor who is usually one of our best and most systematic debaters, not being able for some cause to confine his thoughts to the subject. Mr. T., was however, fully equal to the occasion. He had little time to spare for art and science, and devoted that to improvement. Instead of offering us the fashions and those accumulations of wealth represented by treasures of art and architecture, rich fabrics from the loom and storehouses of priceless plate and china, that trumpery which forms such a distinct and impassable barrier socially between the rich and the poor, he spoke of the splendid achievements in labor-saving machinery accomplished work that had so unspeakably benefited the poor man, and women too; and delivered them in many cases from a life of toil as constant and hard as that of the serf, or slave. Of the thousand and one inventions which have mostly a local use he had no time to speak. He spoke only of the fifteen great American inventions which have revolutionized the world, describing each and contrasting the old way with the new. Those inventions are the cotton gin, the planing machine, the grass mower and reaper, the rotary printing press, navigation by steam, the hot air engine, the sewing machine, the india rubber industry, machine manufacture of horse-shoes, the sand blast for carving, the guage lathe, the grain elevator, artificial ice making on a large scale, the electric magnet and its practical application and the telephone.

The judges gave their decision unanimously in favor of the Neg.

The meeting then adjourned to meet at Wm. Witherell's in four weeks, July 13th, with the following program:

Pennsylvania Declares Her Views on Prohibition.

A ROBUST OPINION EXPRESSED.

Most of the State Heard from and the Amendment Defeated by Over 160,000 Majority—Women and Children Take a Hand at the Polls—The Cities Against the Country—President Harrison's Civil Service Board Seems To Be in Dead Earnest—Its Visit to Indianapolis.

PHILADELPHIA, June 19.—The people of the state of Pennsylvania voted yesterday on the question of incorporating an amendment prohibiting the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors in the state constitution. An amendment abolishing the poll-tax qualification for voters was also voted upon.

A Vigorous Campaign.

Probably no political campaign in the history of the state has been more vigorously conducted than has that of the advocates of temperance. Nightly meetings have been held in every county running up into thousands, and eloquent speakers have been brought from near and afar to impress upon the people the advantages of total prohibition. The liquor interest has been equally active, and between the two parties a good many barrels of money have been spent. The campaign has had the active aid of Postmaster General Wanamaker, who has worked vigorously on the side of the Prohibitionists, and the cause of the latter has also been championed by ten of thousands of the gentler sex.

Women and Children at Work.

At many places throughout the state ladies were at the polls all day, and at others the children were put at work giving out tickets. In some places prayer meetings were held all day. In Pittsburg the women voters encountered many unpleasant experiences, but with all made a gallant fight. Brass bands and children singing could be seen almost everywhere in Pittsburg and Allegheny and presented a picturesque sight. Generally, however, the women were treated at the polls with the greatest respect.

The Result Is a Tidal Wave.

The vote began to come in early and indicated a big majority against the prohibition amendment. Philadelphia city complete gives 93,184 majority against that amendment, and 90,361 majority for the amendment abolishing the poll-tax. Pittsburg complete, 16,549 majority against it and Allegheny City over 4,000. The majority against the amendment will be 23,000 in Allegheny county. The strength of the prohibitionists was in the country districts, as usual, while the cities rolled up the anti-prohibition majorities, also as usual.

The latest returns are up to 2 a. m. to-day. Sixty-four of the sixty-seven counties in the state give 164,470 majority against the Prohibition amendment. Carbon, Clinton, and Elk counties are yet to be heard from. Forty-two counties (not including Allegheny) give 4,525 majority for abolishing the poll-tax, but the rural districts voted against this amendment and it is probably lost.

The Vote at Johnstown.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 19.—Johnstown gives a majority of 6 against the amendment. The vote in the seven wards was as follows: For amendment, 437; against, 443. A very light vote was polled in all the wards, and the election was entirely devoid of excitement or incident. No election board was organized in the Third ward until after 1 o'clock in the afternoon, and no vote was cast until that time. In the other wards the voting places were located in inconvenient and inaccessible places.

The Amendment Beaten by 188,000.

PHILADELPHIA, June 20.—Official and estimated returns from every county in the state show a majority of 188,449 against the proposed prohibition amendment. The amendment providing for the repeal of the poll-tax qualification is lost by about 150,000 majority.

RHODE ISLAND VOTES "WET."

The Prohibitory Amendment Repealed by a Large Majority.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., June 21.—In the spring of 1886 the people of the state adopted a constitutional amendment prohibiting the manufacture or sale in the state of intoxicating liquors. The "wet" men have carried on a vigorous campaign for its repeal, and at the last session of the legislature another amendment was ordered submitted to the people repealing the prohibitory amendment. The election on the question took place yesterday, and considering the difference in the vote of the two states, the "dry" men got a worse defeat than they did in Pennsylvania.

Comparison of the Vote.

By the constitution it required a three-fifths vote to repeal the amendment, and the result is nearly a three-fourths vote for repeal. The total vote was 28,499 for repeal of the amendment and 9,851 against repeal. The amendment is therefore repealed by 5,469 more than the required three-fifths of the total vote. The amendment was adopted in 1886 by a vote of 15,113 to 9,230. The vote in this city was 11,919 for repeal, 2,940 against repeal. Pawtucket voted 2,657 for and 710 against repeal. The official announcement of the vote will be made some time between July 15, when the official count must be completed, and July 20.

MAKING MATTERS LIVELY.

The Civil Service Reform Commission Making Itself Understood.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., June 19.—Mr. Roosevelt, the civil-service commissioner, made matters very lively at the postoffice yesterday for Postmaster Wallace, who looks not unlike Charles A. Dana, of New York. Assistant Postmaster Thompson (who tried in vain to talk as fast as Mr. Roosevelt the local board of examiners), and Dudley Foulke, whose hobby is civil-service reform, were also in attendance. Mr. Roosevelt said to Postmaster Wallace at the outset: "You can reinstate any old soldier without reference to his having been out of the office more than a year."

Had a Penchant for Gambling.

Then the case of Charles E. Moore was taken up. It had been charged that Moore, while in the mail service under Postmaster Jones, was convicted of gambling, notwithstanding which he was reinstated by Postmaster Wallace. Capt. Dodd, ex-deputy postmaster, testified that he had warned Moore to quit gambling, and Moore himself admitted that he had been asked by Postmaster Jones to resign on account of his gambling propensities, which he did without protest. He said that upon his arrest he gave a bond of $40, but failed to appear in court to answer the charge. He also admitted that he got his $40 back, as it was understood to be a straw bail.

Postmaster Jones' Idea.

Charles W. Riggs, who has passed the civil service examination, was interrogated. He said that when he applied to Postmaster Jones for a place he was asked what political candidate he had voted for, which led Mr. Roosevelt to declare that such an act on the part of a postmaster would justify the commissioners in asking for his removal.

When Mr. Roosevelt came to the cases of Messrs. Wheat and Tousey, dispatching clerk and city distributor, he said very peremptorily: "Mr. Wallace, you will discharge those men at once."

Must Change His Practice.

These with some others had been given positions for party service, and had not been required to stand examination. Assistant Postmaster Thompson was disposed to kick at the summary manner in which Tousey and Wheat were dismissed. Mr. Roosevelt asked him: "Do you, in the light of recent developments, consider these selections legal?"

"Yes, sir," was the answer.

"Well, don't act on that thought."

Wants It Understood.

Commissioner Roosevelt said he would like to have the newspapers announce that the absolute impartiality of examinations was guaranteed, and it was a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment to corruptly favor any applicant. He had seen a newspaper interview in which Postmaster Wallace was alleged to have said that he would give preference where he could to republicans.

The postmaster declared that he had been misunderstood, as he had only referred to excepted places.

The Worst Stroke of All.

He then requested that a special examination to be ordered, saying he had twelve positions to fill and that only fourteen eligibles were at his disposal. The commission refused to order the special examination, holding that fourteen eligibles were quite enough to fill twelve vacancies. Every one of the fourteen is a Democrat, all having passed the examination months ago.

MORE PLUMS GIVEN OUT.

Three Important Appointments Made by President Harrison.

WASHINGTON CITY, June 22.—The president has appointed John L. Stevens, of Maine, to be minister resident to the Hawaiian islands; George Maney, of Tennessee, to be minister resident to Paraguay and Uruguay, and John Martin Crawford, of Ohio, to be consul general to St. Petersburg. John L. Stevens is one of the most prominent of Maine Republicans and has held important positions under the United States and the state of Maine. During Grant's administration he was minister to Paraguay and Uruguay, and under President Hayes he was transferred and appointed minister to Sweden and Norway. He has served in the Maine legislature and has held local offices. Gen. Maney was appointed minister to the republic of Columbia by President Garfield. He has been prominent in Republican circles in Tennessee and was chairman of the Tennessee delegation at the last Chicago convention. Professor Crawford's appointment is looked on more as a recognition of scholarship than as a reward for party services. He is an author of some note and has just published a translation of the national epic of Finland.

Politics in Ohio.

WASHINGTON CITY, June 19.—Representative Williams, of Ohio, in an interview yesterday said: "The thing that is now occupying the attention of the folks in Ohio is the governorship. There is no doubt in the world that Foraker will be renominated. It is known now that he will accept the nomination, and that practically settles the matter. He could, if he wanted, be the successor to Senator Payne, but he is not after that." Speaking of the speakership contest in the next house, Col. Williams said he thought the contest lay between Reed and McKinley.

NEW YORK, June 19.—Governor Foraker is here and was asked last night if he was a candidate for renomination. He replied that he was not, and would not take it

Carnegie Dines Gladstone.

LONDON, June 19.—Mr. Carnegie gave a dinner at the Hotel Metropole last evening to Mr. and Mrs Gladstone. There were thirty guests including Minister Lincoln and Mrs. Lincoln, Sir William Vernon Harcourt and Lady Harcourt, John Morley and Mrs. Morley, Consul General New and Mrs. New, General and Mrs. Lawton. The affair was strictly private. Mr. Gladstone did not not speak.

More Consulates Filled.

WASHINGTON CITY, June 22.—The president has appointed Frank Mason, of Ohio, to be consul general at Frankfort; Charles B. Trail, of Maryland, consul at Marseilles, and H. G. Knowles, of Delaware, consul at Bordeaux. Among other appointments to the position of internal revenue collectors was that of William Cassius Goodloe to be collector for the Seventh Kentucky district.

MRS. HAYES PARALYZED.

The Ex-President's Wife Stricken with the Dread Disease—Simond Cameron Sinking.

CLEVELAND, O., June 21.—A special from Fremont, O., states that Mrs. Rutherford B. Hayes, wife of the ex-president, was yesterday afternoon stricken with paralysis. Her entire right side is affected, and at 9 p. m. she had not recovered consciousness. Gen. Hayes was in Columbus, but arrived home at 5 o'clock in the evening. The other members of the family have been telegraphed for.

LATER.—At a late hour last night there had been no change in Mrs. Hayes' condition.

LANCASTER, Pa., June 21.—Gen. Simon Cameron was yesterday stricken with paralysis of the right side and is in a critical condition. Wayne McVeagh, Mrs. McVeagh and Mrs. Hakleman, his daughter, are with him at his home in Donegal Springs.

LANCASTER, Pa., June 24.—Gen. Simon Cameron's condition yesterday was practically unchanged from Saturday, and though he is very weak his physicians consider it possible that he may live several day's longer Lawyer Billings Out on Bail.

WATERLOO, Ia., June 20.—Judge Couch yesterday approved the bond of M. E. Billings, who is charged with the murder of County Attorney Kingsley at Waverly, and he was released from custody. One of the sureties on the bond was a member of the jury that convicted Billings of murder in his first trial.

Couldn't Get a Pardon for Mackin.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., June 20.—Representative James H. Farrell, of Chicago, and Thomas E. Merritt, of Marion, were in the city yesterday endeavoring to secure a pardon for J. C. Mackin. They left without it, and declared that their mission had been a failure.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

A Grand Haven parson sauntered down to the D. The fun of the whole thing lay in the fact that the mistake was mutual, she taking the parson to be a friend whom she expected to meet. The parson apologized.

A pair of tramps called at the home of a Mayville farmer and, finding that he was absent, concluded to run the ranch to suit their own lawless notions. But they were cut short by the unexpected appearance of a very active dog, and in their haste to escape left the most serviceable portion of their neither garments, which the dog retained as trophies of the encounter.

The retailer of snake yarns hasn't a monopoly of the field of natural curiosities this season. But along in the night he was awakened by the odor of roasted eggs, just in time to subdue the blaze that would soon have consumed the whole establishment. That machine has since gone out of commission.

A Suit Involving $600,000.

OMAHA, Neb., June 22.—A hot legal battle involving $600,000 is being fought in the United States circuit court here. John Fitzgerald, president of the Irish National league, is plaintiff, and the Fitzgerald-Maloney Construction company and the Missouri Pacific road are defendants. Fitzgerald was general manager of the construction company, and conducted the building of something like 100 miles of new road in Wisconsin, for which he claims never to have received any compensation. One of the points raised is that while representing itself as being financially embarrassed and compelled to borrow money in order to complete the contract it had on hand the directors of the company held a meeting and voted to declare themselves a heavy dividend.

TESTIMONIALS WORTHY OF CONFIDENCE.

My daughter Maud has used Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters, which you so strongly recommended her to try for inflammatory rheumatism. Her limbs were badly swollen, and the poor girl was in terrible agony. In the midst of the pain we wound the Plasters about her limbs, and, as a result the swelling was reduced and she became quiet and rested. The syrup corrected her indigestion, cleansed the rheumatic poison from her blood, and she is now able to be around the house. Hibbard's Rheumatic Syrup and Plasters are remedies of great merit. REV. J. ROBERTS, Pastor First M. E. Church, Fremont, Mich.

THE RECONCILIATION.

Two urchins strolling on the beach,
Beside the tranquil sea,
Beheld a pearly block, and each
Cried, "That belongs to me!"
And both at once with eager hands,
Began to scramble in the sands.

Lo, while they strove, a stranger tall,
Strode quickly to the spot.
He stooped beside the champions small,
And took the prize, I wot;—
Then spoke in solemn voice and slow,
"Ye both are richer than you know."

Like alabaster pure and white,
Upon the pebbled shore,
That treasure lay, a lovely sight,
And well worth fighting o'er;
Long struggled the contending twain
The prize so coveted to gain.

Then with a string he did divide
That precious cake, and smiled;
"'Tis Ivory Soap, share it with pride;
My lads be reconciled!"
Each took his half and went his way,
Oh, rich and happy boys were they.

A WORD OF WARNING

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory;'" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

Losses at Johnstown.

Estimates on the Houses and Furniture Destroyed.

THE FIGURES PUT AT $5,500,000.

They Do Not Include the Destruction of Store Stocks, Nor the Losses of the Mills—Plans of the Pittsburg Committee for Rebuilding the Town—Ghastly and Awful Exposures Made by the Dynamite—The Physicians Declare That the Dead Number 10,000.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 24.—The Pittsburg members of the relief commission took a look over the grounds yesterday. They have been not a little amused at the exaggerated reports of losses caused to real and personal property by the flood. A Pittsburg paper yesterday published a statement that the losses would run from $20,000,000 to $40,000,000. This statement set the commission at work figuring on the matter, and the result is summarized as follows:

Half a Million for Furniture.

"According to the estimate of James McMillan, Cyrus Elder, and other leading business men of Johnstown the aggregate loss of houses was about 1,800. This includes the losses in the Conemaugh valley. In figuring up what it requires to furnish a house including all necessary articles, but of course without throwing in any frills, it takes about $50, exclusive of carpets. But for the sake of argument and computation, let us say that these 1,800 houses would require $200 each to furnish them, or $360,000, but to give all the margin necessary let us call it $500,000. So much for the furniture.

$5,000,000 Figured for Houses.

"Now the average cost of replacing these 1,800 houses would not be over $2,000 each, $3,600,000, and again to give a margin to these figures let us put this at $5,000,000, plus the $500,000 for loss of furniture and you have nearly what the aggregate cost of the flood is. Of course these figures do not include the losses of the Pennsylvania railroad or the Cambria Iron company, but we have nothing to do with them.

The Facts Are Bad Enough.

From this it will be seen that the real estimate will not reach 25 per cent. of the amount published this morning. We very much doubt if the assessed valuation of all the property in Cambria county is $20,000,000; we will go further, we very much doubt if Cambria county is worth $20,000,000. However, it is bad enough, and the necessities of the people must be looked to and alleviated at the earliest possible moment. How is this to be done? Let us figure.

The Wherewithal in Sight.

"When Governor Beaver pays back to Pittsburgh the $120,000 advanced from the relief fund to pay off the laborers under the volunteer system, Pittsburg will have about $500,000 with which to go to work to relieve the wants of the people. By relief now we mean giving them houses and fitting them up for them. This is what we propose to do. In addition to this $500,000 there is probably $500,000 in Philadelphia. Governor Beaver has in his hands a like sum. Mayor Grant, of New York, has over $300,000. The people of Johnstown themselves have $150,000, and there are other large sums in the hands of the heads of municipalities throughout the country which are available at any moment a requisition is made for them.

Plans for Rebuilding.

"Now, as to rebuilding and furnishing houses for the people. Pittsburg has ordered 100 houses at $130 each with furnishments at $50 each. Governor Beaver has ordered 100 houses at $200 each, 100 others at $125 each, and there will be 100 stores put up on the public square at a cost of $350 each. The cost of the erection and furnishing of these houses will of course come out of the funds already named. Now what will these buildings aggregate? One hundred houses at $100 each will cost $10,000; their furnishments will cost $5,000 additional. One hundred houses ordered at $200 each will cost $20,000, with $5,000 more for their furniture; and 100 houses at $125 each, with same furnishments, $17,500.

Cost of the Proposed Scheme.

"This will make $57,000 for the erection and furnishing of 300 houses. There yet remains 1,500 houses to be supplied. To do this will cost $225,000, with $75,000 for furniture. These figures show that it will cost about $300,000 in round numbers to do this building; but it will be found that a great many of the citizens will want to put up their own buildings, and this of course will lighten up the expenses of the general relief committee materially. But to be liberal let us say that the cost of completing this scheme of rebuilding and furnishing houses will be $500,000. We intend to carry it out on this basis. Of course some people will not be satisfied, but they must remember the circumstances under which the work is being done, and that we are trying to do the greatest good for the greatest number, and in the end all will feel that we have been honest and sincere in our efforts in their behalf.

Cleaning the Streets of Debris.

"We don't believe it will cost over $500,000 to clean up the streets of the city. With a force of 2,000 men at work it will require not more than from ten to twelve weeks to finish up the work. It will be seen by these figures that the work of clearing up the streets will fall far below $500,000, not forgetting to include in this the $120,000 put up by the Pittsburg relief committee to pay off the volunteer force."

A DAY WITH THE WORKERS.

Awful Things Exposed by the Dynamite—Another Estimate of Dead.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., June 24.—Dynamiting the wreck was vigorously continued Saturday above the bridge. With every shot bodies were found, but they were so much decomposed that identification was almost impossible. The body of a young lady, supposed to be the daughter of John Linton, was recovered Saturday evening.

Born to Instant Death.

One of the sad sights of the day was the recovery of the body of a woman and an infant lying closely together. The mother was badly burned and decomposed. The baby had evidently been born in the water, and was fairly well preserved, as the flames had not reached it. The part of the mother's head that had escaped burning was almost entirely eaten away by worms.

The physicians take decided issue with the recent estimates of loss of life during the flood. At a meeting held Saturday by all the physicians in the district, notes were compared, and it was agreed unanimously that not less than 10,000 perished during those awful hours on Friday, May 31 and Saturday, June 1. The physicians have first class opportunity for a correct judgment, knowing everybody as they do, and some of them differed with the majority only in putting the lost at 12,000.

Latest Report of Bodies Recovered.

Twenty-one bodies were recovered Saturday. Two were identified as Miss Hannon and Annie Lenhart. Four bodies were recovered yesterday. The remains of two women and a little girl were found in Stony creek, and the remains of a Chinaman were found in Kernville. The body of one of the women was identified by a letter found in her pocket as the wife of Mr. Clark, a grocer, in Johnstown. The child is believed to be Mrs. Clark's daughter, as they were found lying close together.

Bad Use for Its Nine Lives.

Saturday while a gang of men were at work removing debris from a livery stable near the Baltimore and Ohio depot they heard a faint cry from a pile of wreckage near by. The men set to work to investigate, and in half an hour they rescued a living cat, which had evidently been imprisoned there since the day of the flood. It was a veritable skeleton; its neck being no thicker than a man's finger. The feline was carried to the Red Cross hospital, where it was kindly cared for, and christened Red Cross Flood. It will recover, and is attracting much attention.

Notes.

The opening of the saloons resulted in much turbulence, and Judge Johnston telegraphed from Ebensburg Saturday that they must close or stand the penalty of revocation of licenses. This produced a good effect, and matters were much quieter yesterday.

Late Saturday evening oil was poured over the piles of wreckage and fires lighted to consume as much of it as possible by Monday.

Work was entirely suspended yesterday. Open air services were held by the pastors of the homeless churches.

IDENTIFIED BY MARTINSON

The Express Driver Picks Burke Out as One of the Cronin Assassins.

WINNIPEG, Man., June 21.—The link connecting Martin Burke with the Cronin murder was completely established last evening when Martinson, the expressman who hauled the furniture to Carlson's cottage, and who arrived here yesterday, identified Burke among fifty-two prisoners and citizens who stood in a semi-circle in the jail yard. The identification was complete and beyond all doubt. Martinson walked before the men and picked out his man at the first glance. Chief Hubbard, of Chicago, has been notified to this effect. Burke stood the ordeal well; he never flinched, and maintained the same stolid demeanor that has characterized his actions since his arrest. Chief McRae says Burke's intellect is dull and that he is not capable of showing any feeling.

Burke Was Number Twenty.

When Martinson passed down the line Burke stood twentieth, with his hands in his pockets and his eyes averted. Martinson glanced quickly into his face, marked his number on a slip of paper, and passed on examining the faces of other men. After completing the investigation he returned to where the officers and counsel were standing and held a whispered conversation. Counsel Howell was heard to remark: "We are satisfied. We will not want anybody else to identify the prisoner; but be positive of the number."

The Prisoner Arraigned.

Burke was arraigned before Judge Bain under the extradition act yesterday morning. The case was postponed until Wednesday next at the request of counsel for the prosecution, who desired to have time to bring witnesses from Chicago. The evidence adduced before the Chicago grand jury will be submitted here.

Brickmakers Strike for Eight Hours.

CHICAGO, June 19.—Two hundred brickmakers in the brick yards of Purington & Kimball and Walk Bros., Blue Island, and sixty employed by Adam Weckler's brick manufacturing establishment, Hammond, Ills., struck yesterday for eight hours' work without reduction in pay. The manufacturers express their determination to hold out against the demands of the men and fill their places with new employes. It is thought that 800 or more additional brickmakers, who are now working ten hours, will be drawn into the movement.

Hovey Appeals for the Miners.

INDIANAPOLIS, June 20.—Governor Hovey last night prepared a proclamation in relation to the strike of the block-coal miners of Clay county. He quotes the address sent him by the commissioners of Clay county, and then states that he does not presume to claim any legal right to request or demand any aid from the citizens of this state for the relief of the suffering miners or their families, but he hopes that the appeal will meet a warm response.

THE RAISIN SEMINARY.

AN INTERESTING COMMENCEMENT PROGRAM AT THE VALLEY SCHOOL.

Eight Graduates Receive their Diplomas—An Address by Congressman Allen—A Brief Synopsis of the Exercises.

The Raisin Valley Seminary under Prof. Hathaway's management has become more than usually prosperous during the past year. A large number of students has been in attendance, and the school has run very smoothly. The regular commencement exercises of the graduating class took place on Friday of last week. The weather was somewhat threatening in the morning, but the clouds cleared away, and left the atmosphere cool and delightful. By ten o'clock the grounds were filled with teams and the seminary hall was crowded to overflowing. The walls of the room were nicely ornamented with the national colors and other flags, while the east end of the room and the rostrum were decorated with evergreens and flowers. A large floral umbrella was suspended from the ceiling over the platform. There were eight members of the graduating class, and in point of ability and scholarship it will compare favorably with any class that ever left the seminary.

Promptly at the appointed hour the audience was called to order by Prof. Hathaway, who opened the exercises by reading a short scriptural selection. Then followed prayer by Rev. Mr. Breese.

Esther Binns, of Holloway, read the first essay, entitled Woman as a Reformer. The natural aptitude of man and woman in the role of reformer was compared. We are all placed on earth for some purpose. Every person has some influence—woman no less than man. The influence of woman is first felt in the home. What an influence for good mothers and elder sisters can exert over the children of a household. The character of the greatest reformers has been molded in infancy by their mothers. Woman's missionary and temperance societies have done a great work to elevate human character. In the last century woman has made a wonderful progress in social and intellectual position, and she is now honored with a voice in all important questions of reform.

The Advisability of the Fifteenth Amendment was the title of an oration by Chas. E. Chase, of Raisin Center. The address was clear, logical and finely written. The gist of his argument was that the fifteenth amendment, in its practical effect has failed to meet the expectations of its friends, and that its present effect is injurious in many ways. Each point was sustained by strong evidence. The idea of the essay was well presented in its closing summary: "We have seen that this amendment is not advisable from the fact that it gives to an illiterate class of citizens no incentives to educational advancement; that it places in the hands of the minority the power to rule the majority; that it corrupts the purity of the ballot; that it does not debar from a voice in the government even a class known to be injurious to the stability of the nation."

A vocal solo, Out on the Deep, was finely rendered by J. T. Rugh, of Adrian college. Mr. Rugh has a deep rich voice, which has been well trained, and his songs are models of vocal music. Miss Gay Lewis, of Adrian, accompanied him at the piano.

Mattie T. Jones, of Adrian, read an essay on The Music of the World. This essay gave a sketch of the improvement in the art of music from ancient times down to the present. It showed that the author was fully conversant with her subject, and the essay was one of the best on the program.

The Condition of the South was the title of an address by Geo. L. Kelly, of Holloway. The corner stone of our national prosperity is the education of the masses. The South is behind in this respect. In material progress the southern states are all making rapid headway. Not only the cotton and border states but the extreme southern states of Florida and Texas are experiencing a business boom. The South abounds in wealth, but her people cannot utilize it. This condition is largely a legacy of the past, and its continuance is due to the poverty of the people and their general indifference to education. The South must be educated before she can hope to attain the full measure of her possibilities.

May L. Kellogg, of Adrian, gave an essay on Respect for our Seniors. The idea of this essay was the necessity of cultivating politeness and good manners. Proper respect for our superiors in age, office or dignity, habitually observed from childhood will make the forms of true politeness so natural that they will be observed almost unconsciously. The importance of these forms, either from a social or business point of view cannot be overestimated. Whether in school, at home or in society, we carry with us some sort of a reputation. What is reputation but the shadow cast by character? If the shadow is of so much importance, the substance also should be beautiful and attractive. The formation of this character must begin at home, and has its foundation in respect for our seniors. The numerous pioneer societies recently founded are an outgrowth of respect for the memory and deeds of our forefathers.

A Loophole in the Constitution, by M. Augusta Knight, of Trenton, was a very clear exposition of some of the defects of our electoral system. The lack of a provision for Presidential succession in case of the death or disability of both President and Vice President has been remedied by the act of 1886, but there is another serious defect in our present system. If the President elect should die between the time the returns are sent in and the 4th of March, who would be president after the 4th of March? The President holding the chair would go out, and the Vice President elect could not succeed. The easiest remedy for this defect would be to call the electors together a second time.

Miss Gay Lewis executed a piano solo, entitled The Polish Dance, in her usual happy manner.

Arthur J. Salter, of Adrian, spoke upon The Quaker Orator. This essay was a fine biographical sketch of John Bright, the venerable English statesman, tracing his career from its humble beginning through his great campaign to repeal the Corn Laws and his opposition to the Crimean war. A synopsis of the essay is impossible, but it was one of the best productions of the day.

Personal Liberty Parties was the subject of an address by Willits R. Worthington, of Adrian. The first among these parties, both in numbers and importance, is the Knights of Labor. This was organized chiefly to secure better wages for its members. Its two principal weapons of war are the boycott and the strike. The effect of strikes is so disastrous that they are now discountenanced by many of the Knights themselves. The Henry George free land party has considerable strength in some sections. Their main tenet is that there should be no private ownership of land. They advocate what is called the "single land tax." The Anarchists are fewer in number than either of the other parties, but more dangerous in teachings. Whether these parties should be put down, and if so by what method it can be accomplished, is an important political question at the present time.

Prof. Hathaway then presented the diplomas to the class in brief but very appropriate remarks.

Congressman E. P. Allen was then introduced, and favored the class and the audience with a most felicitous extempore address about twenty minutes in length He gave the class some excellent advice. His remarks were given in an easy conversational manner which made a marked impression upon his hearers.

At this point Mrs. Mary T. Lathrop, of Jackson, introduced a little episode that was not down on the regular program. Three elegant albums were brought upon the stage, and in a few fitting remarks she presented them to Prof. Hathaway, Mr. White and Mrs. Parker. Each of the three responded briefly in acknowledgment of the honor.

Mr. J. T. Rugh sang another solo, A Maid of Kent, in his happiest vein, and the audience was then dismissed with the benediction.

In the evening the Alumni society held their reunion. An interesting program was presented consisting of an address to the class by A. C. Green, an oration by W. B. Green, and vocal music by the Raisin glee club, followed by a banquet.

THE WALTER A. WOOD BINDER.

Some of our competitors are saying that the Walter A. Wood single apron binder is a failure. The proof of the pudding, however, is in the eating. What do the farmers say? Read. They say it excels all others in

1. Elevating qualities.
2. Lightness of Draft.
3. Certainty of Tying.
4. Quality of Work.
5. It is the simplest and strongest.
6. It is the most economical.
6. The bundle carrier improvement.

The last improvement alone is a very important item as it saves the expense of one harvest hand. Although this section is already well supplied with harvesters, I am selling a large number of the Walter A. Wood machines. Farmers who pay out their money for an expensive article want the best the market affords and the Wood binder fills the bill every time. The company have a stack of testimonials large enough to fill a bank safe, coming from Maine to Texas, written by farmers who use them, commending the Wood single apron binder. Call on me before you buy.

RIDING ON THE RAIL.

We have been waiting some time for a convenient opportunity to present it self to make brother George N. Stacy a visit at Elgin, Ill. Last Saturday seemed to be a good time to leave. We took the evening train on the Mackinaw road, and in due season arrived at Battle Creek. Went directly to the Grand Trunk depot, which is but a few rods distant, and after half an hour's waiting took the night express for Chicago. A cozy berth in a sleeper enabled us to get a good nights rest. Arose about eight o'clock, took a bountiful breakfast on the dining car and alighted at the Dearborn station about nine o'clock a. m. The route we took is a very convenient one for Tecumseh people who wish to visit Chicago. One can leave here at nine in the evening and be in the city at nine the next morning, with breakfast eaten, ready for business. The train service on the Grand Trunk is not excelled on any road in Michigan. The coaches are well warmed and ventilated, the track is in fine condition, and the officials are gentlemanly and obliging. A ride on that road from Battle Creek to Chicago is a genuine pleasure. Upon arriving at Chicago Sunday morning we proceeded directly to the Grand Pacific expecting to remain several hours but found we could catch a train on the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul road at 12 30. The intervening three hours were passed in reading the morning papers, and—well they were spent honestly and agreably anyway. At noon we proceeded to the St. Paul depot on Canal street, and boarded the lightning express which runs directly to Council Bluffs and thence over the Union Pacific to San Francisco. The train was a heavy one, composed of four common coaches, a dining car and five vestibule Pullmanns all filled. As soon as the city limits were passed the engineer opened the throttle and such a "riding on the rail" we have rarely experienced. Elgin was the first station out of Chicago—thirty six miles distant, and the train, for a portion of the distance, must have made at least sixty miles an hour. Upon alighting at Elgin we found a big crowd at the depot and then learned for the first that the engine No 796—pulling the train, was the largest locomotive in the United States. The crowd had gathered to take a look at the monster. It had six drivers, three on each side, eighty inches in diameter, and was literally a Leviathan on wheels. This locomotive and an exact duplicate of it were put on the road only three weeks ago. They were made at the Schenectady works under a guarantee to run one mile a minute between Chicago and Milwaukee, and they have filled the guarantee several times already. They are called the "Passenger Moguls." The C. M. & St. P. road is admirably equipped now and is probably the best managed road at present running west from Chicago. That Sunday train, which was a sample of the regular daily noon express, was a model passenger train in every detail. We arrived at our destination just in time for Sunday dinner and passed the balance of the day with George, under his own vine and fig tree.

We spent Monday very pleasantly looking around the city. Elgin is a thriving town located in a beautiful section of country, and is one of the dairy centers of the Union, the soil and climate of that vicinity being admirably adapted to grazing. S. S. Mann one of the pioneer farmers of Kane Co. was at one time the most extensive breeder and importer of Holsteins in this country. Elgin butter is known even across the Atlantic, and Elgin milk commands the highest price in the Chicago market. The condensed milk factory which makes the "Banner" brand of condensed milk is the largest establishment of the kind in the world. Hundreds of gallons of milk are consumed every day. The immense boiling vats are run by steam heat. The water for cooling is furnished by an artesian well 1876 feet in depth, clear and cold as the purest ice water. By a curious coincidence the well was sunk in the year 1876.

We took a stroll through the grounds of the insane asylum which is one of the best conducted institutions of the kind in the Union. The City has water works, a street railway and electric lights.

George is now occupying a house of his own, having moved into it about three months ago. It is a neat cottage, located in a growing portion of the city on the west side, commanding a fine view down the bluff and across the river. The water mains are laid to his corner. He still holds his position in the News and Advocate office, and is likely to remain there for some time. The office is very similar to that of the Adrian Times.

We left Chicago Monday evening, took a night train on the Grand Trunk, and arrived home Tuesday morning, ready for work again.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucus surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength, by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The indictments grew out of the late election, when much fraud was charged, and it is now asserted that a political sensation is in store and will be brought to the surface at an early date.

RIDGEWAY, April 3, '89.

A NOVEL SOCIAL.

Did you ever attend a barn social? We have, and it was well worth attending too. Mrs. Jonathan Hall has erected an elegant horse-barn on her homestead farm near the village of Ridgeway, and last Friday evening it was handsomely dedicated by a social gathering. The entertainment was gotten up by the Ladies' Church Social and the Library Association and was for the joint benefit of the two. The barn is 28 by 60 feet in size, and the interior is almost as well finished as a house. The lower floor is divided into a carriage room, a harness room, six open stalls for horses and one close stall. There is an immense hay loft up stairs. The barn is covered with a slate roof. The carriage apartment was used as a reception room for the company, and the tables were set in the rear part between the stalls. A large table was placed in the center of the room, which was ornamented with flowers. Directly over this table, a hugh Japanese parasol was suspended rom the ceiling, and around the outer rim of this were hung Chinese lanterns. The interior was well provided with lamps also. The crowd began to assemble at eight o'clock and before nine the capacious building was crowded to its utmost capacity, and it was capable of accommodating a big crowd too.

The following literary program was presented under charge of Dr. Nelson, a portion of the same being given after supper.

Cadet Schotische—Dundee Orchestra.
Praise God—Chorus by the audience
Prayer by Rev. J. Lowry.
Crescent City Waltz—Dundee Orchestra. The orchestra was composed of five pieces and they rendered their selections in a manner which called forth rounds of applause.
Vocal Duet, Fly Away, Birdling—Misses Dora Grayson and Ella Jackson. This duet was splendidly sang and elicited a rapturous encore. The young ladies however were too modest by half, for they failed to respond.
Rivulet Gallop and Prize Overture—by the Orchestra.
Vocal Duet, Spring and Love—Misses Grayson and Jackson.

The tables would accommodate about fifty persons, and they were filled several times before the company had all been provided for. It was a late hour when the crowd broke up, and all present voted it a unique and most enjoyable entertainment. The Library Association and the Ladies Social owe Mrs. Jonathan Hall—and her new barn—a vote of thanks.

NOTICE TO FARMERS.

We would inform the farmers of this vicinity that we are going out of the agricultural implement trade. We have on hand a few of the Reed two-horse spring tooth cultivators, which we will close out at cost; also, some first-class hay-rakes that we will sell cheaper than ever. Give us a call

ADVICE TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

In nine cases out of ten, wives, who are annoyed with fretful husbands, have only themselves to blame. Middle aged men especially who are harrassed with the cares of business need something beside a bread and milk and tea diet. The family table should be furnished with choice meats well cooked, and no amount of good cooking will make a palatable, nourishing dish out of poor material. The best housekeepers in Tecumseh are learning this fact and patronize the West End Market, where they can always procure the choicest steaks, the juciest roasts, the tenderest fowls, the finest sausage and every thing else in the meat line, of superior quality. Call and be convinced.
BIRDSALL, GLENN & CO.

W. L. Heck, our Artist Photographer, is to be congratulated upon securing the services of the Globe Printing and Advertising Co., who have an established reputation as the originators of the most effective plan of advertising known. The work is now in progress and consists of distributing Special Discount Tickets, entitling all holders of such tickets to a per cent off on all Photo work. Success to the worthy enterprise.

—W. E. Heck's card to the People. Having arranged with an advertising Co. to distribute special Advertising Tickets, for the purpose of advertising my business, etc., I assure my friends, patrons and the public, that I have concluded to stay in business in Tecumseh. After visiting several points, I am convinced that this field is good enough for me to display my talent, and hope the people will approve of the decision I have made. Thanking you once more for past favors, and soliciting your future patronage. W. L. H.

—Heck the photolographer is home again.

A GENEROUS OFFER.—The celebrated Dr. Gleason, after a practice of forty years, having during all that time made the cure of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption his special study, has in this time so perfected his treatment as to be able to cure nearly all who suffer from these complaints. Having reached the age of seventy years, he realizes that the time is near at hand when these valuable remedies must be in other hands or become lost to the world. Desiring that his Home Treatment should be within the reach of all, he has placed the prescriptions with the Hall Chemical Company; this company, knowing the wonderful success of the Home Treatment in the cure of all Throat and Lung Troubles, have decided to send the full treatment ON TRIAL to any one who wishes to try it. Dr. Gleason has also written a valuable treatise on these diseases, which is profusely illustrated with finely executed wood-cuts, showing the Head, Throat and Lungs as they are when diseased; it discusses in an able manner the cause and cure of these complaints; it is printed on heavy super-calendered paper and handsomely bound. This book, together with full instructions how to order on trial, will be sent free to all who will write and ask for it. Address

REVIEW OF THE QUARTER.

LESSON XIII, SECOND QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JUNE 30.

Importance of the Lessons Here Reviewed. Alternative Possibilities of Happiness or Misery—Condition and Population of Palestine—Roman Law.

The lessons for the second quarter of this year deal with the later teachings and most momentous prophecy of Christ—that concerning the destruction of the Temple, the end of the world and His second coming—and with the last scenes of his life, and the thrilling incidents attendant on his resurrection.

In all literature nothing is recorded that will compare for one moment in interest with these events. The statements are so important that, if true, all other truths are by comparison unimportant; if false, all other falsehoods are by comparison harmless and insignificant. If we could believe that the writers of the New Testament and their immediate successors had fabricated this impressive narrative we should at once be driven to the conclusion that, far beyond all men that ever lived, they discovered the art of making a falsehood far more vital in its spirit and more powerful in its effects than truth, for all the admitted truths recorded in profane history have had less effect on the subsequent course of the world, and today have less effect upon the lives and consciences of men than this simple narrative. We should, in adopting that theory, be compelled to the utterly absurd conclusion that a little band of Jews, most of them ignorant and nearly all poor, had, with most marvelous ingenuity, with a skill in fiction surpassing all the masters in that art, fabricated a story which revolutionized the civilized world, forged a theology which survived all forms of government, and announced a delusion which has fired the hearts of hundreds of millions of people and led them to despise danger and welcome death. Such a theory is too preposterous for discussion.

On the other hand, admit the truth of this narration and what awful conceptions at once rise to impress the mind: God, eternity, sin, moral accountability, retribution and liability to eternal woe, then an incarnated Saviour, free salvation, redemption, resurrection, eternal happiness. The bare possibility of such alternative results should, even on the lowest principles of self love, awaken every man to earnest inquiry. That there are points in the prophecy not yet determined and statements in the history not fully understood should not weigh for one moment against the awful importance of what is clear. The teachings of each lesson have been noted in their turn, but it may be well to set forth a few facts in history and language which aid in making clear the meaning of the Gospel history.

First, it is to be noted that the four gospels were written in the Greek language, though there is evidence that Matthew first composed his in Hebrew, and that they were written after the Christians had become sufficiently numerous to create a demand for a complete record, each gospel being devised to meet the needs of a special class. These classes arose as follows: The Jews had lost the Hebrew language as a popular speech, and at the time of Christ spoke the Syro-Chaldaic, the country was ruled by the Romans, so the language of the laws was Latin, while the scribes of Palestine and bordering countries wrote in Greek. The Romans had conquered all the civilized world west of Persia, including Greece, Egypt and Asia Minor, where the conquests of Alexander the Great had made Greek a common vehicle of speech and writing. The Jews retained Hebrew as their sacred language. Hence we see that the inscription over the head of Christ upon the cross was in the Hebrew and Greek and Latin, to be read by the priests and the people in Jerusalem who were not Jews as well as the residents.

Thus, too, those evangelists who wrote for Gentiles often add the interpretation of a word giving its name as the Jews had it in Hebrew and then the Greek equivalent, which their readers understood. Golgotha in Hebrew was Calvaria in Latin. Mark, Luke and Paul were Greek names, though borne by Jews. Simon, Levi, etc., were Hebrew names, while in several cases the writer gives the name one was known by in both languages, whether a totally different name or merely the same name translated. Simon is Hebrew; Peter is Greek, from "petros," a rock. As might be expected from their age, nearly all the towns retained their old Hebrew names, as Nazareth, Bethlehem, Capernaum; but towns recently built had Latin names, as Cæsarea, Philippi.

The government was in like manner composite. It was the practice of the Romans to slaughter without mercy till a country was conquered, then grant universal amnesty, take the leading men of the conquered country into the Roman service, interfere not at all with religion and as little as possible with local customs as long as government was respected and the taxes paid. The Roman governors appointed for the conquered countries were not only instructed, but it was obviously their best policy, to be considerate of local prejudices, and they often yielded to what they considered folly or injustice because they "feared a sedition of the people." Pilate, whose office included the functions of local governor and judge advocate, repeatedly interceded for Jesus and declared that he "found no fault in the man," nevertheless betrayed Him up to the Jewish council, and they condemned Him under Jewish law.

The interlock of local and general law was very similar to that in British India and the territories belonging to the United States; For all offenses against the ordinary law the people retained their old courts and privileges, but if the accused was a Roman citizen or was charged with treason to Rome, he had to go before the higher court. Pilate declared that Jesus had done nothing that Romans cared to punish, and as to the rest he was willing to please the Jews, but St. Paul inherited Roman citizenship from his father, so the local authorities "dared not leave him bound," nor could he be put to death till he had had his appeal to Rome. Even when the inferior courts condemned the Romans often executed the sentence, as in the case of Jesus, crucifixion was a Roman method, as that of the Jews would have been by stoning. Despite Pilate's anxiety to please the influential Jews his troubles constantly increased (for they were restive under Roman rule), and he finally ordered a massacre in Samaria, for which he was recalled to Rome. He was found guilty and banished to Vienne, in Gaul (France), where he died nine years after the crucifixion. His enemies in Rome averred that he committed suicide in consequence of his disgrace, and there is an old tradition that he sank into a hopeless melancholy, lived alone in a hut on Mt. Pilatus, and finally drowned himself in the lake there.

Spring Disorders

Shattered nerves, tired brain, impure blood, debilitated system, all are the natural outcome in the Spring. A medicine must be used, and nothing equals Paine's Celery Compound. We let others praise us—you cannot help believing a disinterested party.

Brigadier-General W. L. Greenleaf, Burlington, Vt., writes: "I have used Paine's Celery Compound on several occasions, and always with benefit. Last spring, being very much run down and debilitated, I commenced taking it. Two bottles made me feel like a new man. As a general tonic and spring medicine I do not know of its equal."

"I have used two bottles of your Paine's Celery Compound, and it has given entire satisfaction as an appetizer and blood purifier."
T. L. BERNER, Watertown, Dakota.

Paine's Celery Compound

is prescribed by physicians, recommended by druggists, endorsed by ministers, praised by users, and guaranteed by the manufacturers, as a spring medicine which will do all that is claimed for it. Use it this spring, and see how quickly it tones you up.

Woodchucks are so plentiful in Washtenaw county that the boys make money scalping them at 15 cents per scalp—the regulation bounty.

A Niles lady was considerably surprised by a bolt of lightning that pulled off one of her shoes but otherwise did no injury. Still, she's not overly anxious for a repetition of the experiment.

A Michigan man, who's a circuit court reporter, is the inventor of a new-fangled type writer, which is said to knock the keys clean off the machines now in use.

Michigan sportsmen are still on earth and with both feet, too. An Ogemaw man solemnly avers that he harvested a trout eighteen inches in length the past week, while an Eaton Rapids citizen is equally certain that he's corralled fourteen big black bears since the posies bloomed. At any rate he shows the bar' skins, which are worth about $12 each.

An Onekama resident of 60 summers and presumably old enough to be good, is charged with effecting the ruin of a young girl, and now meditates in the bastile.

More than $200,000 worth of Gladstone's municipal improvements have been made by J. F. Colton, a Minneapolis man. He's a hustler on improvements.

A non-combustible paint is the invention of a Flint citizen, but insurance rates haven't yet been reduced as anybody knows of.

The statement that Thomas Harris, late of St. Clair county, left no heirs at the time of his death, seems to have been a trifle premature. At any rate there's no lack of claimants for the $30,000 worth of property he left behind, whatever may have been the dearth of relatives while living.

The $25,000 damage suit brought by Chris Johnson against Warden Watkins, of the Ionia house of correction, was brought to a termination at Grand Rapids, Judge Severens instructing the jury to render a verdict for the defendant on the grounds of public policy. The testimony taken indicates the prison discipline to have been somewhat severe.

The Great War Syndicate.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON.

The crab slowed up not far from one of the foremost of the British ships, and coming round to the quarter of the gunboat, the astonished captain of that vessel was informed, through the speaking tube, that if he would give his parole to keep out of this fight, he would be allowed to proceed to his anchorage in Portsmouth harbor. The parole was given, and the dynamite gunboat, after reporting to the flag ship, steamed away to Portsmouth.

The situation now became one which was unparalleled in the history of naval warfare. On the side of the British seven war ships were disabled and drifting slowly to the southeast. For half an hour no advance had been made by the British fleet, for whenever one of the large vessels had steamed ahead, such vessel had become the victim of a crab, and the vice admiral commanding the fleet had signaled not to advance until further orders.

The crabs were also lying to, each to the windward of and not far from one of the British ships. They had ceased to make any attacks, and were resting quietly under protection of the enemy. This, with the fact that the repeller still lay four miles away without any apparent intention of taking part in the battle, gave the situation its peculiar character.

The British vice admiral did not intend to remain in this quiescent condition. It was, of course, useless to order forth his ironclads, simply to see them disabled and set adrift. There was another arm of the service which evidently could be used with better effect upon this peculiar foe than could the great battle ships.

But before doing anything else, he must provide for the safety of those of his vessels which had been rendered helpless by the crabs, and some of which were now drifting dangerously near to each other. Dispatches had been sent to Portsmouth for tugs, for it would not do to wait until these arrived, and a sufficient number of ironclads were detailed to tow their injured consorts into port.

When this order had been given, the vice admiral immediately prepared to renew the fight, and this time his efforts were to be directed entirely against the repeller. It would be useless to devote any further attention to the crabs, especially in their present positions. But if the chief vessel of the syndicate's fleet, with its spring armor, and its terrible earthquake bombs, could be destroyed, it was quite possible that those sea parasites, the crabs, could also be disposed of.

Every torpedo boat was now ordered to the front, and in a long line, almost abreast of each other, these swift vessels—the light infantry of the sea—advanced upon the solitary and distant foe. If one torpedo could but reach her hull, the vice admiral, in spite of seven disabled ironclads and a captured gunboat, might yet gaze proudly at his floating flag, even if his own ship should be drifting broadside to the sea.

The line of torpedo boats, slightly curving inward, had advanced about a mile when Repeller No. 11 awoke from her seeming sleep, and began to act. The two great guns at her bow were trained upward, so that a bomb discharged from them would fall into the sea a mile and a half ahead. Slowly turning her bow from side to side, so that the guns would cover a range of nearly half a circle, the instantaneous motor bombs of the repeller were discharged, one every half minute.

One of the most appalling characteristics of the motor bombs was the silence which accompanied their discharge and action. No noise was heard, except the flash of sound occasioned by the removal of the particles of the object aimed at, and the subsequent roar of wind or fall of water.

As each motor bomb dropped into the channel, a dense cloud appeared high in the air, above a roaring, seething caldron, hollowed out of the waters and out of the very bottom of the channel. Into this chasm the cloud quickly came down, condensed into a vast body of water, which fell, with the roar of a cyclone, into the dreadful abyss from which it had been torn, before the hissing walls of the great hollow had half filled it with their sweeping surges. The piled up mass of the redundant water was still sending its maddened billows tossing and writhing in every direction toward their normal level, when another bomb was discharged; another surging abyss appeared, another roar of wind and water was heard, and another mountain of furious billows uplifted itself in a storm of spray and foam, raging that it had found its place usurped.

Slowly turning, the repeller discharged bomb after bomb, building up out of the very sea itself a barrier against its enemies. Under these thundering cataracts, born in an instant, and coming down all at once in a plunging storm; into these abysses, with walls of water and floors of cleft and shivered rocks; through this wide belt of raging turmoil, thrown into new frenzy after the discharge of every bomb—no vessel, no torpedo, could pass.

The air driven off in every direction by tremendous and successive concussions came rushing back in shrieking gales, which tore up the waves into blinding foam. For miles in every direction the sea swelled and upheaved into great peaked waves, the repeller rising upon these almost high enough to look down into the awful chasms which her bombs were making. A torpedo boat, caught in one of the returning gales, was hurled forward almost on her beam ends until she was under the edge of one of the vast masses of descending water. The flood which, from even the outer limits of this falling sea, poured upon and into the unlucky vessel nearly swamped her, and when she was swept back by the rushing waves into less stormy waters, her officers and crew leaped into their boats and deserted her. By rare good fortune their boats were kept afloat in the turbulent sea until they reached the nearest torpedo vessel.

Five minutes afterward a small but carefully aimed motor bomb struck the nearly swamped vessel, and with the roar of all her own torpedoes she passed into nothing.

The British vice admiral had carefully watched the repeller through his glass, and he noticed that simultaneously with the appearance of the cloud in the air, produced by the action of the motor bombs, there were two puffs of black smoke from the repeller. These were signals to the crabs to notify them that a motor gun had been discharged, and thus to provide against accidents in case a bomb should fail to act. One puff signified that a bomb had been discharged to the north; two, that it had gone eastward, and so on. If, therefore, a crab should see a signal of this kind, and perceive no signs of the action of a bomb it would be careful not to approach the repeller from the quarter indicated. It is true that in case of the failure of a bomb to act, another bomb would be dropped upon the same spot, but the instructions of the war syndicate provided that every possible precaution should be taken against accidents.

Of course the vice admiral did not understand these signals, nor did he know that they were signals, but he knew that they accompanied the discharge of a motor gun. Once he noticed that there was a short cessation in the hitherto constant succession of water avalanches, and during this lull he had seen two puffs from the repeller, and the destruction, at the same moment, of the deserted torpedo boat. It was, therefore, plain enough to him that if a motor bomb could be placed so accurately upon one torpedo boat, and with such terrible result, other bombs could quite as easily be discharged upon the other torpedo boats which formed the advanced line of the fleet. When the barrier of storm and cataract again began to stretch itself in front of the repeller, he knew that not only was it impossible for the torpedo boats to send their missives through this raging turmoil, but that each of these vessels was itself in danger of instantaneous destruction.

Unwilling, therefore, to expose his vessels to profitless danger, the vice admiral ordered the torpedo boats to retire from the front, and the whole line of them proceeded to a point north of the fleet, where they lay to.

When this had been done the repeller ceased the discharge of bombs, but the sea was still heaving and tossing after the storm, when a dispatch boat brought orders from the British admiralty to the flag ship. Communication between the British fleet and the shore, and consequently London, had been constant, and all that had occurred had been quickly made known to the admiralty and the government. The orders now received by the vice admiral were to the effect that it was considered judicious to discontinue the conflict for the day, and that he and his whole fleet should return to Portsmouth to receive further orders.

In issuing these commands the British government was actuated simply by motives of humanity and common sense. The British fleet was thoroughly prepared for ordinary naval warfare, but an enemy had inaugurated another kind of naval warfare for which it was not prepared. It was therefore decided to withdraw the ships until they should be prepared for the new kind of warfare. To allow ironclad after ironclad to be disabled and set adrift, to subject every ship in the fleet to the danger of instantaneous destruction, and all this without the possibility of inflicting injury upon the enemy, would not be bravery; it would be stupidity. It was surely possible to devise a means for destroying the seven hostile ships now in British waters. Until action for this end could be taken, it was the part of wisdom for the British navy to confine itself to the protection of British ports.

When the fleet began to move toward the Isle of Wight the six crabs, which had been lying quietly among and under the protection of their enemies, withdrew southward, and making a slight circuit, joined the repeller.

BRITISH OFFICERS WATCHING THE EFFECT OF THE MOTOR BOMBS.

Each of the disabled ironclads was now in tow of a sister vessel or of tugs, except the Llangaron. This great ship had been disabled so early in the contest, and her broadside had presented such a vast surface to the northwest wind, that she had drifted much farther to the south than any other vessel. Consequently before the arrival of the tugs which had been sent for to tow her into the harbor, the Llangaron was well on her way across the channel. A foggy night came on, and the next morning she was ashore on the coast of France, with a mile of water between her and dry land. Fast rooted in a great sand bank she lay week after week, with the storms that came in from the Atlantic and the storms that came in from the German ocean beating upon her tall side of solid iron, with no more effect than if it had been a precipice of rock. Against waves and winds she formed a massive breakwater, with a wide stretch of smooth sea between her and the land. There she lay, proof against all the artillery of Europe and all the artillery of the sea and the storm, until a fleet of small vessels had taken from her her ponderous armament, her coal and stores, and she had been lightened enough to float upon a high tide and to follow three tugs to Portsmouth.

WHY IS IT

That people linger along always complaining about that continual tired feeling? One bottle of BEGG'S PURIFIER and BLOOD MAKER will entirely remove this feeling, give them a good appetite and regulate digestion.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought untill we recive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

WRITING MACHINE CABINET and OFFICE DESK

For Remington, Hammond, and Crandall Type Writer

The advantages of this Type-writer and Office Desk over all other so-called Combination Cabinets, are:

First.—The ease and simplicity with which the desk is changed from a Library or Office Desk to a Type-writer Table. This change is effected by pushing the lid covering the machine back in the rear of cabinet—it being a roller top—removing it entirely from sight, thus overcoming the objectionable board and sounder in front of the operator. The movable top is perfectly flat, is big size covered, and forms a complete writing desk when the machine is not in use. The table on which the machine rests is so evenly balanced by our patent adjustments that it needs but a slight touch to bring the machine in position.

Second.—The advantages of the swinging table are: The table is so balanced near its center on patent malleable iron arms, that when the machine is brought in place for use, it does not depend on ropes or hangers at rear of platform for support, but is held rigidly in place by its own weight, making it impossible for the machine to be touched down an incline in back of desk by the breaking of rear support. The machine rests on patent sides which keeps the machine in place, and can be drawn out beyond the desk, well under the operator's hand.

Third.—The construction of the lid closing machine space makes it air tight, and the table having felt around its boarders thoroughly protects the machine from dust.

Fourth.—The foot rest and the construction of the table adjustments makes the desk as ridged as though the top was one solid board, which is a matter of great importance where a solid type-writing table is required. No operator can do good work on a shaky table.

Lastly.—The cabinet is a splendid piece of cabinet work. We manufacture them in Walnut, Antique Oak, Natural Oak, Natural Cherry, Cherry imitation, Mahogany and Ash.

Agents wanted to sell these cabinets, and where we have no agencies established we will sell direct from our works at wholesale prices.

George will probably study some profession and Esther expects, when the fall term opens to "teach the young idea how to shoot."

We have in our possession a stalk of wheat, raised by Al. Kelley, the variety has not been ascertained but the length has, and it measured just five feet two inches, and we are satisfied this is not the tallest stalk in the field either. Can any one show a better, for length of straw?

Uncle Libni Kelley is very low, (June 18th,) and it is a question of but a few hours ere he passes to the "sleep that knows no waking," to a calm and peaceful rest; he has not taken any nourishment for quite a few days, and Monday was attacked with spasms.

HARVESTERS AND BINDERS.

There are several harvesting and binding machines in the market now, and the competition between them is waxing hot as harvest season approaches. Without disparaging other machines, we confidently assert that the Milwaukee Junior leads them all. In these FIVE particulars its superiority is unquestioned;

1. DURABILITY—In the construction of the Junior, the best material the country affords is used: skilled mechanics are employed in our factory, and each machine is thoroughly tested and inspected before shipment. We shall continue to furnish, regardless of expense, the most durable Harvester and Binder, and depend upon an appreciative and intelligent public to maintain the high standard of the Milwaukee Junior.

2. SIMPLICITY—Complication is a thing to be avoided in all kinds of machinery, and this has been effectually done in the Junior Harvester and Binder. In adding new features to our machine, it has always been our aim to simplify rather than complicate and in this way we have greatly reduced the number of wearing parts, thereby increasing its durability and lessening its draft.

3. EASE OF MANAGEMENT—In placing the levers, we have carefully considered the convenience of the operator and so arranged them that he can put the machine in proper adjustment for cutting all kinds of grain without leaving his seat, and so easily are the different changes made that a boy who can guide the team can operate the Milwaukee Junior.

4. LIGHTNESS OF DRAFT—Our Junior is the first and still remains the only successful two-horse harvester and binder on the market, and is so acknowledged by all our competitors, its weight being only 1150 pounds.

5. PRICE—No other machine in the market of equal value is sold at so low a figure. Any farmer can test this assertion by pricing the different machines.

I invite the farmers of northern Lenawee to call at my headquarters—Williamson's poultry house—in Tecumseh, and examine this machine before placing their orders.

CHARMED BY A RATTLER.

Terrible Experience of a Little Girl Near Denison, Tex.

DENISON, Tex., June 22.—H. P. Hedden, who resides southeast of Denison several miles, brought to the city Friday his little child, Sallie, to be treated for a snake bite. About 6 o'clock Friday morning the little girl left the house with a pail on her arm to gather wild blackberries near what is called Stone spring. The child was expected to return home in a few minutes as the family was to leave early to pass the day with a neighbor. The child being absent something over an hour, Mrs. Hedden proceeded to the spring. The child was not there, and the mother called her name loudly several times. Receiving no response, she left the spring and walked into the blackberry patch to hunt up the child.

Nearly Fainted with Horror.

Passing through the patch she saw a scene which made her scream and almost faint with horror. The child was seated on a rock and circled in her lap was a large rattlesnake. The child was caressing the snake, whose head was slightly elevated and moving to and fro. Sometime the snake's head would almost touch the lips of the child, who pushed it away without appearing to anger the snake. The child was so completely under the spell of the serpent that it paid no attention to the mother, who screamed so loudly that her husband heard her a quarter of a mile distant and hurried to the scene. When Mr. Hedden appeared the snake placed itself in attitude of battle and the air almost seemed to vibrate with the noise of the rattler.

LEAD THEM ALL.

726,510 Machines have been sold. 54,026 made and sold in 1888.

The Single Apron Improvement.

Its striking advantages are—three rollers as compared with six; one canvas versus three; six bearings as compared with twelve; three buckles versus twelve. The draft of the machine is thereby very materially reduced. The apron is driven from the underside, hence the upper side or top of apron is comparatively loose and easily passes, without friction, under the apron guides. The only Binder adjustments on the Wood are the three desirable ones—Regulating size of Bundle—Regulating tightness of Binding—Regulating position of Band. Each of these adjustments is made instantly.

CLINTON CLIPPINGS.

Another shock was given this community last Saturday by an accident which resulted in the death of one of the brightest little boys we have ever known—little Leander Smith, five years old. It seems that he and Linnie Hendershot were in Draper's livery barn during the temporary absense of the men and in some way one of the horses kicked, striking Leanda on the jaw—the noise attracted attention and on going in they found Linnie holding Leander up, but so badly frightened himself that he could not tell how it occurred. Dr. Tuttle was summoned and the boy taken home. On examination they found his jaw was not broken and as he soon revived it was hoped he was not seriously injured. Soon however he changed and in a short time he breathed his last. The funeral was held Monday afternoon at 2-30, Rev. J. Phelps officiating. The stricken parents have the tenderest sympathy of our entire people.

HOLLOWAY HASH.

Farmers have begun their haying, and some portions old fair to have a big yield.

Any one so green as to walk through a wheat field will, if they are not green upon entering, be sure to be green upon emerging. The insect causing this greenness is thought by farmers in this section, to do very little damage if any.

The following news has been handed to us for insertion in the "Hash." Residing in this vicinity is a man who is the cause of much gossip. The boys are speculating and even betting as to whether he is married to a certain young lady residing in the same house, or not. Any one giving satisfactory information on the subject would confer a great favor and relieve the anxiety of the young swains of the community and then stand some kind of show to make themselves agreeable to the young lady in question, or could go out behind the barn and kick themselves as the case might be.

Rufus Kelley of Lyons, Mrs. M. A. Britton of Morenci and Miss. May Satterthwaite of Hanover, relatives of the deceased were here to attend the funeral of Uncle Libini Kelly, Sunday.

Libni Kelley, a worthy and esteemed citizen of Raisin and the oldest citizen in the town, took leave of this world of pain and sorrow, for his immortal mansion, on Friday last at 11:30 a. m. The deceased was born in the town of Denis Mass., Jan. 27th, 1799. The following year his parents moved to Sidney Maine, where he spent his youth. At the age of 24 he was united in marriage to Deborah Estes. In the year 1825 he moved to Wheatland, Monroe Co., N.Y.: from there in the year 1838 with his family he again moved, this time settling on the farm in Raisin where he resided at the time of his death. The year following his move to Michigan, his wife died leaving six children to mourn their loss. In the year 1840 he was married, to Lydia Hoxie; this second union being blessed by three children. His life was one of unceasing toil. The first years of his life in Michigan were spent like other pioneers in clearing up his farm. Although posessing scanty education his judgment was such that his advice was sought on many occasions by his friends and neighbors. He early became convinced that his future welfare and happiness depended on his leading a devout christian life; with this conviction he joined the society of friends where he and his family regularly attended. The funeral was held in the Friends Church at Raisin Center Sunday June 30th. Rev. Mr. Harkness officiating. A large gathering of friends and neighbors paid the last tribute to the memory of the deceased. He leaves a wife and eight children to mourn his departure.

LAKE RIDGE LACONICS.

G. Y. Osgood lost a valuable brood mare last week, worth $200; he is raising the colt by hand.

"Civil service reform" is playing havoc with our mail it comes about every other day. When the Herald comes down by lumber wagon, we get it the same day it is printed (Thursday) but by regular mail, Saturday or Monday. Why not every body adopt the political rule and change hands on the result of election.

Wool is changing hands at about 28 cents.

Now is a good time for putting in tile, but money is so scarce farmers can't buy, and laborers are pitching quoits waiting for something to turn up. Old party news papers are advocating the coinage of a ½ cent piece to meet the present demands of trade. Why not bring it down to 0 (aught.) Which would be best, to double the circulating medium so as to make a cents worth of labor and product worth a cent in money, thereby booming trade and giving employment to labor, or contract the currency so that it takes $2 worth of product or labor to pay $1 of debt, half going into the coffers of the moneyites.

The old rule was that 5 slaves equal 3 free men in representation, but in this enlightened age the rule is reversed.

Joe Horan, by nature a good citizen, of Cone, fell from the sidewalk while crossing the river between Milan village and the Wabash depot last Tuesday and was drowned. His body was found on Thursday and deposited in Lake Ridge cemetary Friday.

This is said to be another victory for high license.

We hope the republicans will hurry up with their 2 by 3 local option law which requires only 3 "moral temperance" votes to offset 2 whiskeyites. They must expect to carry it easy or were afraid that counties which passed it before, might again. Just hold your breath and listen while they rattle around in the harness and break a hamestrap pushing the question to the front.

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, JULY 4

STRANGLED A MURDERER.

A Woman Who Poisoned Her Family Hung —"Red Nose" Mike's Death.

PHILADELPHIA, June 26.—Sarah Jane A. Whiteling, the poisoner of her husband and two children, was hanged yesterday morning in the long corridor of the convict department of Moyamensing jail. The condemned woman slept quietly most of the night. On awaking in the morning she remarked that she was feeling well, and was glad her time had come. She then passed some time in prayer and in reading her Bible, and later ate a light breakfast. When her spiritual advisers arrived and entered her cell she greeted them cordially, and remarked that she was ready to die.

Pleased at the Prospect.

The woman's bearing throughout the terrible ordeal was a most remarkable exhibition of fortitude and resignation. During the entire morning she never for a moment showed the slightest evidence of weakness, and frequently expressed her pleasure at the prospect of "meeting her husband and children." The several physicians who were present at the execution and who have more or less frequently been with the condemned woman since her incarceration, expressed surprise at her exhibition of calmness in meeting her death, although they agreed in the statement that she has at no time shown any evidence whatever of unsound mind.

Went to Death with a Firm Step.

The clergymen continued with her until the hour of execution, praying with her. In the meantime the procession of those summoned to witness the execution assembled, and forming in double column began the march to the scaffold. On reaching the prisoner's cell she came out with a clergyman and took up her position at the head of the line. The march was then resumed to the gallows, where Mrs. Whiteling and the clergymen ascended the steps. She never faltered on the way to the scaffold, and her step was as firm as if going to a feast. Prayers were said, a few words exchanged, the cap was placed over the woman's head, and in a moment she was dangling at the end of the fatal rope a corpse, death being instantaneous. Her body was taken to the Norristown insane hospital, where the brain will be examined by insanity experts. The execution was the first in which a woman was the victim in Philadelphia county.

Her Horrible Crimes.

The crime, or series of crimes, that Mrs. Sarah Jane Whiteling committed was the most revolting ever recorded in the annals of crime of the peaceful city of Philadelphia. She deliberately poisoned her husband and two children for the paltry sum of $360, the amount of their life insurance.

"Red Nose" Mike Swung Off.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., June 26.—Michael Rizello, alias "Red-Nose Mike," was hanged in the prison yard here yesterday morning for the murder of Paymaster McClure and Hugh Flanagan last October. The drop fell at 10 o'clock, and Rizello was pronounced dead in eighteen minutes. The murderer met his doom with tolerable composure, and there was no sensational incident in connection with the execution.

Rizello, with two other Italians who escaped to Italy with their share of the plunder, shot to death J. P. McClure, paymaster for Contractor McFadden, and his assistant Hugh Flanagan, at a lonely spot on the road between this city and the point at which the contractor was working. The two men had $12,000 with them, which the murderers obtained. The government is now negotiating with Italy for the extradition of Mike's accomplices, that government being unwilling to give them up.

CROSSED THE DARK RIVER.

Gen. Simon Cameron Succumbs to a Stroke of Paralysis.

HARRISBURG, Pa., June 27.—Gen. Simon Cameron died at 8 o'clock last evening. Although his demise had been expected for several days the announcement that he had succumbed to the attack of paralysis, which prostrated him last week, created great sorrow in this community. His condition during the day was rather encouraging, and death came suddenly during a weak spell. Up to the last attack he was conscious and had no trouble in swallowing the food given him and which he appeared to assimilate.

SIMON CAMERON.

DR. M'DOW A FREE MAN.

The Slayer of Editor Dawson Acquitted—Exultant Negroes.

CHARLESTON, S. C., July 1.—The McDow trial came to an end Saturday with a verdict of not guilty, and immediately upon the announcement a cheer arose that called from the judge a stern rebuke. The accused was enthusiastically congratulated by his friends, and upon being released was taken home in a coach, being followed thither by a crowd of people, many of them negroes. This latter class have been friends of McDow from the start, owing to dislike of Dawson because of remarks in his paper some time before he was killed which were taken by the negroes as a reflection on the chastity of negro women. It is said that one herculean black shouted at the top of his voice: "That settles it. The richest white man in Charleston shan't call me a nigger again. If he does, I know what to do." The friends of Editor Dawson are correspondingly indignant. It is said that the jury was unanimous, the five white men being for acquittal on the first ballot.

Did McInerny Die?

Another Alleged Clan-na-Gael Assassination.

DR. JOHN M'INERNY, OF NEW YORK,

Starts for Omaha and Never Reaches There —One of the Four Marked Men, The New York Herald Wants to Know Where He Is—Seven Indictments Returned at Chicago—Lawyer Sullivan Not Among Them, and Why—Confident Officials.

NEW YORK, July 1.—The Herald, in a two-column article, calls attention to the fact that Dr. John McInerny, one of the four men who are alleged to have been doomed to death by the inner circle of the Clan-na-Gael, is missing still, and intimates that he was killed before Cronin was. Shortly before he was last seen, in the middle of April, he received at the Catholic Protectory a telegram from Omaha offering him a good position if he would come there immediately to take it.

Can Hear Nothing from Him.

It is assumed that he started for Omaha in time to have arrived in Chicago en route on April 21. His friends in New York have written to Omaha to inquire about the telegram and the alleged position awaiting him, and have received replies that after diligent inquiry no one could be found who was interested in McInerny's going to Omaha, nor had he been seen there. John Devoy, who was McInerny's associate at The Irish Nation office, believes McInerny was lured to his death by the telegram.

He was One of the Doomed.

All agree that there is just as good ground for believing that McInerny was assassinated as for the assertion that Cronin was slain by the inner circle of the Clan-na-Gael, which had doomed Cronin, McInerny, Devoy, and Dr. McCahey, of Philadelphia, to death. There is evidence to show that traps were laid for McCahey, just like those that at first failed with Cronin, and Devoy has been openly threatened, and men have watched his movements, not knowing that their own movements were also watched.

FOUND SEVEN INDICTMENTS.

The Chicago Grand Jury Finishes Its Work in the Cronin Case.

CHICAGO, July 1.—The special grand jury investigating the Cronin murder has at last got through its work and presented its report. The indictments found are against the following persons: Daniel Coughlin, John F. Beggs, Patrick O'Sullivan, Martin Burke, Patrick Cooney, Frank Woodruff, John Kunze. All of these men were already under arrest, except Kunze, who has disappeared, but is indicted as the man who drove Cronin to the cottage on the night of the murder. It is the belief of the grand jury, after the hearing of the evidence, that Cronin was killed by Coughlin, Cooney and Burke, and that P. O'Sullivan was present in the cottage when the blows were dealt, if not actually engaged in the bloody work. They also believe that Coughlin arranged the details and struck the murderous blows.

Lawyers Sullivan and Beggs.

The fact that A. L. Sullivan was not included in the list was a surprise to most people, but Judge Longenecker says that he was left out for several reasons, one being that the jury did not have time to hear the evidence. The case has not been dropped, however, and will be considered by another grand jury. Another reason was that the prosecution had more evidence, but it was not complete, and an indictment would have brought the fight into court, where the state would have been called upon to state its evidence, which was not considered good policy at this stage of the matter. Beggs, it is believed, had no hand in the work outside the secret meetings of the inner circle of Camp No 20, where, it is asserted, the "removal" of Cronin was determined. The officials are confident that several in the above list will swing for the crime, and are also confident that this crime, like the murder of Cavendish and Burke, will have its Carey.

Foreman Clough's Remarks on the Case.

Foreman Clough, of the grand jury, said that a more damnable conspiracy was never conceived and executed. All of the men named in the indictment were deeply implicated in the murder of Dr. Cronin. John O'Neil, another juror, said he believed Dr. Cronin was sentenced to death in Camp 20 of the Clan-na-Gael. Kunze, who had hardly been mentioned in connection with the case until his indictment, he said, was surely one of the murderers. His connection with the murder, he said, can be shown by twenty witnesses.

THEY'RE ALL PLAYING BALL.

The National League Gets to Work for the Pennant.

CHICAGO, June 25.—With the Giants crippled by the absence of Keefe and Ward, Anson's colts gave them a goose egg yesterday. League scores were: At Chicago—Chicago 6, New York 0; at Cleveland—Cleveland 6, Philadelphia 4; at Pittsburg—Pittsburg 7, Washington 4; at Indianapolis—Indianapolis 6, Boston 5.

CHICAGO, June 26.—New York got a run for every hit in the ball game here yesterday and beat the Chicago colts, while the balance of the western clubs were winning against the eastern experts. League scores: At Chicago—Chicago 8, New York 12; at Indianapolis—Indianapolis 6, Boston 4; at Cleveland—Cleveland 8, Philadelphia 6; at Pittsburg—Pittsburg 7, Washington 5—five innings, rain.

CHICAGO, June 27.—Only Indianapolis of all the western clubs was able to wrest a game yesterday from the eastern athletes, and the Hoosiers gave the Bean-eaters a handsome going over. League scores: At Chicago—Chicago 7, New York 12; at Indianapolis—Indianapolis 10, Boston 6; at Cleveland—Cleveland 3, Philadelphia 7; at Pittsburg—Pittsburg—1, Washington 6.

CHICAGO, June 26.—The scores made on the ball field yesterday by National league clubs were as follows: At Chicago—Chicago 10, New York 13; at Cleveland—Cleveland 4, Philadelphia 1; at Indianapolis—Indianapolis 6, Boston 10; Pittsburg-Washington game called at end of second inning—rain.

Saturday's league games gave the following scores: At Chicago—Chicago 8, Boston 2; at Pittsbug—(first game) Pittsburg, 3; Philadelphia 2—11 innings; (second game) Pittsburg 8, Philadelphia 0; at Indianapolis—Indianapolis 1, New York 4; at Cleveland—Cleveland 4, Washington 5.

Got a Few Soft Snaps.

Carlotta Patti, the singer, a sister of Adelina Patti, died in Paris Friday.

THE MURDEROUS MANIAC AGAIN.

He Kills a Sheriff and is in Turn Shot to Death by a Farmer.

DES MOINES, Ia., June 29.—A special to The Leader from Chariton says: Yesterday morning at 4 o'clock a tragedy occurred near Chariton which resulted in the death of Sheriff Ramsey, of Lucas county, and an insane man named John McGinnis. McGinnis had been the terror of the neighborhood, but had been sent to the insane asylum and had come back apparently cured. He was given employment on a farm at haying, but Thursday he showed signs of aberration, and about 11 o'clock Thursday night a farmer appeared in Chariton and swore to an information and a warrant was placed in Sheriff Ramsey's hands.

Found the Maniac Awake.

Accompanied by Constables Nafus and Myers the sheriff went out to serve it. McGinnis was sleeping in the barn on the farm where he was at work, and several other farm hands were with him. It was 4 a. m. when the officers reached the spot. With the acute sense of his malady McGinnis heard their approach. The man sleeping with him, being awakened, said: "I am the one they want. I will go down and see." McGinnis replied: "No, they are after me." Both came down together.

The Lunatic's Fatal Markmanship.

When they came in sight of the sheriff, the latter spoke in a pleasant voice: "How do you do, John! My name is Ramsey. I am the sheriff." At once McGinnis drew a revolver and fired, killing Ramsey almost instantly. Constable Nafus fired at the maniac, the bullet penetrating his throat but not seriously crippling him. He was about to return the fire when Farmer Blonse shot him just above the left eye, inflicting a mortal wound. Sheriff Ramsey was widely known and generally liked, and his death has cast a gloom over the entire county.

CHICAGO, June 29.—The scores of National league base base ball clubs yesterday were as follows: At Chicago—Chicago 11, Boston 3; at Pittsburg—Pittsburg 3, Philadelphia 0; at Indianapolis—Indianapolis 2, New York 5: at Cleveland—Cleveland 7, Washington 2

THE GREAT BOATING EVENT.

Yale Beats Harvard in an Eight-Oared Race by Six Length.

NEW LONDON, Conn., June 29.—The fourteenth annual 4-mile, straightaway, eight-oared race, between the Yale and Harvard crews, was rowed last evening over the Thames river course from Winthrop's Point to Gale's ferry, and was won by Yale by six boat lengths. Official time: Yale, 21:20; Harvard, 21:55. The series of races between these colleges stand: Yale won 8, Harvard won 6. There was a very large crowd of spectators, and every point of view along the four miles was closely packed with people, who cheered each crew wildly.

An Invalid Indiana Law.

CHICAGO, June 29.—Judge Johnston, in an opinion delivered at Valparaiso, Ind., has declared unconstitutional the law passed by the state legislature requiring all beeves intended for food in that state to be inspected on the hoof at the place of slaughter in that state. The matter came up in an attempt to enforce the law against Chicago dressed beef at Hammond, Ind., where J. B. Harvey, agent of Swift & Co., of Chicago, was jailed because he refused to pay a fine assessed for violation of the law.

Don't Have Courts in Iowa.

BEDFORD, Ia., July 1.—A big Indian belonging to the tribe of Omahas, last Friday attempted to outrage the wife of Frank Glassman, living near Gravity. He chased the woman from her home into the fields, but neighbor men saw him, and giving chase stopped him from accomplishing his purpose, and captured him. He was put in jail after a preliminary hearing, and Saturday night the jail was broken open and he was hung to a tree in the court house yard by a mob.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

Improved Champion Mower

The MOST PERFECT and PRACTICAL Piece of Farm Machinery

THAT HAS EVER BEEN INTRODUCED.

The mechanical principles embodied in this Mower are entirely new, and have made it possible to remedy the defects that are well known to exist on the old style machines. It will pay any farmer who is in need of a Mower to examine the IMPROVED CHAMPION—the most perfect and practical of machines—

AND IT IS SO WARRANTED!

The DRIVE WHEELS are high and wide apart, insuring steadiness of motion and light draft. There is NO FRAME WORK hanging down in front to bunch up the cut grass or run into obstructions. There is NO FLY WHEEL LOW DOWN on which the grass can wind. This is a serious objection to the old-style mowers. The POWER IS APPLIED DIRECTLY and without a joint from the main gear to the pitman, and ALL OF THE POWER is used in cutting the grass,—none is wasted on loose joints and fast-running gearing. THE PITMAN WORKS ON A STRAIGHT LINE, AND THE POWER APPLIED AT ONE END IS ALL TRANSFERRED TO THE KNIFE. The CUTTER BAR can be folded while the knife is in motion, which is very important where there are stumps or trees. The Cutter Bar may raise or lower at either end, and yet the knife will work perfectly free without binding or extra friction or wear. This in a measure explains why there are no broken knife heels and no broken pitmans on the CHAMPION Mowers.

REMEMBER that the parts that have given the most trouble on the old-style mowers ARE WARRANTED NOT TO BREAK NOR WEAR OUT on this wonderful mower.

Collided on a Bridge.

Awful Destruction of Human Life on the Rail.

THREE FREIGHT TRAINS WRECKED.

Ten Dead Men Recovered from the Ruins and a Score of Others Believed To Be Still in the Debris—A Large Number Wounded, One of Whom Will Die—Disaster in Tennessee—A Number of Women and Children Hurt.

PITTSBURG, June 27.—Ten corpses and thirteen wounded men—one fatally—and thirty-one wrecked freight cars are the known results of a terrible collision on the Pennsylvania railway near Latrobe, forty miles east of this city, yesterday mornin just before daylight. Besides this, and the most horrible part of it, if confirmed, is the assertion that fifteen to twenty dead bodies are yet to be recovered from the debris.

A Flagman to Blame.

The wreck took place on a bridge about forty feet high, spanning Loyal Hanna creek. The "derry-shifter" (a locomotive) had left eighteen cars standing on the bridge while the crew was drilling out loaded cars at the Latrobe Coal works. The flagman, David Heacox, of the shifter, had gone to the telegraph tower, but as a heavy rain was falling at the time it is not known whether the engineer on the fast freight going west saw his signal or not. In any event, the flagman was not back half far enough, and had his signal been observed the engineer could not possibly have stopped his heavy train of forty-two cars on the down grade in time to avert the accident.

How the Crash Occurred.

The train, going at a speed of twenty-five miles an hour, crashed into the cars on the bridge, tearing up the rails and ties, and plunged over the side of the stone bridge, a sheer distance of forty feet, into the bed of Loyal Hanna creek. At the same moment an east-bound freight was passing on the other track. One of the wrecked cars caught the car next to the caboose on this train, wrecking the caboose and badly using up the pushing engine. Eighteen loaded and thirteen empty cars, together with engine 1313, are a total wreck. The debris took fire at once, but was held in check by the local fire department.

Forty to Fifty Men on the Train.

Engineer Caldwell and Fireman Fralich went down with the locomotive and are still under the wreck. The loss of life can not be accurately estimated. Aside from the trainmen it is known that there were between forty and fifty men on the west bound train who had been working at Johnstown. They were paid off Tuesday and were endeavoring to reach their homes. The injured were attended by the Pennsylvania Railroad company's surgeons, and with the exception of those whose injuries are too critical to allow them to be removed, were sent to the county home or to the hospital in Pittsburg. The dead were washed and coffined by Undertaker Stader, in whose care they have been left for identification.

List of Dead and Wounded.

The known dead are: Elmer Caldwell, engineer, resided at Manor Station; G. F. Fralich, fireman, Pittsburg, leaves widow and two children; George Cargal, Jersey City; Edward Kelly, Philadelphia; unknown man, but thought to be John E. Keenan, of Eau Claire, Wis.; Albert Critchlow, Pittsburg, and four other bodies not yet identified.

The injured are: F. A. Geis, Braddock; John Cleary, Pittsburg; Pat Flannagan, recently arrived from Ireland; P. Fitzgibbons, McKeesport; Peter Maudry, Johnstown; John Mullen, Philadelphia; Lewis Wyble, Indiana, Pa.; James McCurdey, Canada; John H. Miller, front brakeman, Pittsburg; Peter Cavemaugh, Pittsburg; John Howard, Pittsburg; John Jackson, McKeesport; unknown man, unconscious, fatally hurt.

LATROBE, Pa., June 28.—The loss of life at the Latrobe freight wreck will be probably larger than was at first reported, and the death list may reach forty-five. Eng ne No. 1,313, which was supposed to be lying at the bottom of the Loyal Hanna river, was found resting on a box car which was supposed to have contained ten or twelve tramps, and it is probable that a number of bodies will be found when the car is taken out. Two bodies were found yesterday, making twelve so far.

A FIFTY-FOOT PLUNGE.

Serious Disaster on a Tennessee Road—Fifteen Victims, Some Fatally Hurt.

NASHVILLE, Tenn., June 27.—Quite a serious accident occurred on the Chesapeake and Nashville railroad yesterday near Bledsoe. The morning train due at Gallatin at 10 o'clock was skimming along for its destination when the baggage car, freight and postal car jumped the track and fell down an embankment about fifty feet. Henry Peacock, postal clerk, and Conductor E. B. Buck jumped and escaped without injury. Peacock managed to crawl back toward the track, when the coach with fourteen passengers passed over him without touching him.

How the Passengers Fared.

The coach turned over three times before landing at the bottom. The passengers were all hurt more or less. Women screamed, and when the bottom was reached the roof of the car was torn off, when women, children, and seats were piled in one common mass. No one was killed outright, but it is feared that two or three are so badly injured they will die. None of the employes of the road were hurt. The accident was caused from no carelessness on the part of the road.

Names of the Injured.

Among the injured are: Mrs. Sis Clayborne, of Westmoreland—also four children, one of which is dying, Mrs. Clayborne bruised about the head and face; Mrs. A. L. Grant, of Westmoreland, collar-bone broken, and has two children injured; Henry Crabtree, of Westmoreland, badly injured and his physicians think he will die; D. Brown, a merchant of Scottville; Mrs. William S. Whiteside; W. E. Bryant, of Scottsville, Ky., several ribs broken; C. B. Coe and S. B. Smith, of Washington, Ky., both slightly injured.

IMPORTANT APPOINTMENTS.

Fred Douglas Goes to Hayti—A Place for a Chicago Man.

WASHINGTON CITY, June 28.—The president Friday appointed Frederick Douglas minister to Hayti.

The president also appointed Daniel Ramsdell, of Indiana, marshal for the District of Columbia, vice A. A. Wilson resigned, and James G Wright, of Illinois, Indian agent at the Rose Bud agency in Dakota.

SAMUEL CALLED OF GOD.

LESSON I, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 7.

Text of the Lesson, 1 Sam. iii, 1-14—Commit to Memory Verses 8-10—Golden Text, 1 Sam. iii, 10—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of A. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.)

Having spent six months upon the life of our Lord Jesus as recorded in the Gospel by Mark we now return to the study of the book which Jesus loved and from which He always preached, "expounding unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning Himself." (Luke xxiv, 27.)

1. "And the child Samuel ministered unto the Lord before Eli." Our last Old Testament studies were in the book of Judges and closed with the incidents of the book of Ruth. We are now about to study the life of the last of the judges, who was also a prophet, as it is written in Acts xiii. 20, "He gave unto them judges about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet." We must think of Israel as having been in the enjoyment of that good land which God gave unto them over 400 years; the tabernacle is still at Shiloh (chap. i, 3, 24), where it had been set up in the days of Joshua (Josh. xviii, 1); Eli is the judge, and his sons, Hophni and Phinehas, are priests of the Lord (chaps. iv, 15-18; i, 3), but as we shall see in our lesson today they are far from being godly men. In these days of apostasy, Eli being old and his sons wicked, a certain woman named Hannah asks and receives from God a child, whom she promises to give unto the Lord all the days of his life, calling his name Samuel, which signifies "Asked of God" (chap. i, 11, 20).

2, 3. "The Temple of the Lord, where the Ark of God was." The temple here mentioned is the tabernacle which Moses had built in the wilderness, and which had now been for so long a time at Shiloh, in the inner room of which, or Holy of Holies, was the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord of all the earth (Josh. iii, 11), and in the outer room or Holy Place was the table of shewbread, the golden altar of incense, and the golden seven branched candlestick or lamp stand, the lamps of which were lighted every evening and dressed every morning.

4. "The Lord called Samuel, and he answered, Here am I." Samuel is supposed by Josephus to have been at this time about twelve years of age.

5. "And he ran unto Eli, and said, Here am I, for thou calledst me." Thinking that Eli had called him, he rose up quickly and ran to him with these words, but Eli not having called him and not seeing that it was the voice of the Lord, bids him to lie down again, and Samuel obeys. How quickly the boy responded to what he supposed was the call of Eli; what promptness, what denial to self of the gratification of a little more slumber; a grand lesson for all.

7. "Now Samuel did not yet know the Lord, neither was the word of the Lord yet revealed unto him." He knew the Lord through the words of Moses and Joshua and ministered unto Him as thus revealed, but up to this time the Lord had not spoken directly to Samuel.

8. "And the Lord called Samuel again the third time." And again he arose and went to Eli with the same words, "Here am I; for thou didst call me." What parent's heart would not be made glad by such a son; what unwearied though apparently fruitless obedience, but it shall be rewarded. Eli at last perceives that it is the voice of God and that the Lord has actually called the child; the only recorded instance in which the Lord spoke in a vision in an audible voice to a little boy; but let all the children know and believe that when they read the Bible or hear it read God is as really speaking to them in His word as when He spoke to Samuel.

10. "And the Lord came, and stood, and called as at other times, Samuel, Samuel. Then Samuel answered, Speak, for thy servant heareth." The Lord knew that Samuel did not know His voice, and so He came again and again so lovingly and patiently until Samuel, through Eli, had been taught that it was the voice of God, and then with entire surrender of soul the boy yields himself to the word and will of God. Does it not remind us of Jesus Himself at the age of 12, saying, "Wist ye not that I must be about my Father's business?" When we are thus yielded, God will reveal Himself to us.

11. "And the Lord said to Samuel, Behold, I will do a thing in Israel at which both the ears of every one that heareth it shall tingle." He announces that a judgment is about to come in Israel and that people shall be amazed at it and tremble. The expression "ears tingling" is only found twice elsewhere in the Bible (II Ki. xxi, 12; Jer. xix, 3) and is in each case in connection with coming judgments.

12. "In that day I will perform against Eli, all things which I have spoken concerning his house; when I begin I will also make an end." Having made the general statement that He would do a mighty work of judgment in Israel, it might be asked, where Lord? In what tribe, or shall it reach the whold nation? He immediately indicates where it shall strike, even upon the very head of the nation, Eli and his house, and He indicates that it shall be short and complete.

13. "For I have told him that I will judge his house for ever for the iniquity which he knoweth; because his sons made themselves vile, and he restrained them not." God never exercises judgment without mercy.

14. "And therefore I have sworn unto the house of Eli, that the iniquity of Eli's house shall not be purged with sacrifice nor offering forever," not because there is not atonement sufficient to reach and remove the sin of Eli's house, but because of the lack of repentance on their part. Jesus Himself said that all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men; but He also said that the blasphemy against the Holy Spirit shall not be forgiven unto men (Matt. xii, 31); which if I understand it signifies the persistent and continued resistance of the Spirit until death, or until He withdraws and leaves to himself the person thus resisting Him; and when a person is thus left by the Spirit it will be found impossible to approach them upon the matter of their souls' welfare. Israel as a nation afterward sinned so greatly that it was said by the Lord: "Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet my mind could not be toward this people." And again: "Though these three men, Noah, Daniel and Job, were in it they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness, saith the Lord God" (Jer. xv, 1; Ezek. xiv, 14). And so it is written: "The wrath of the Lord arose against His people till there was no remedy" (II Chr. xxxvi, 16), not because God was not willing and able to save them, but because they would not be saved, mocking His messengers, despising His words and misusing His prophets. It seems also strange that such a solemn and weighty message as this to Eli should be given to the boy Samuel; but it was somewhat similar in the case of Jeremiah, who said: "Ah, Lord God! Behold I cannot speak for I am a child." Observe the Lord's answer to him (Jer. i, 6-8) and lay it to heart. Samuel in the morning told Eli every whit, and hid nothing from him, and from that time he was established to be a prophet of the Lord (vs. 18-21); how it would have been with him if he had kept back something for fear of hurting Eli's feelings, who can tell?

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a lady in this country. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus write W. C. Hunting & Co., of Shelby, N. C.—Get a free trial bottle at

NOT FINISHED, BUT BEGUN

TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT OF THE TECUMSEH HIGH SCHOOL.

The Banner Class Receive their Diplomas—A Brilliant Program Presented to an Immense Crowd—A Beautiful Floral Display.

For many years past our citizens have looked forward to the graduating exercises of the High School with bright anticipations. This year the banner class—fourteen in number—were to receive their diplomas, and the expectations of the public had been correspondingly advanced. Without in the least disparaging previous classes, we can say that no class, since that of 1877 which contained 12 members, has offered to their friends a more brilliant commencement program. The opera house was crowded to its utmost capacity, and even standing room was at a discount. The graduates completed the Scientific, Latin or English courses, seven having taken the first course and seven the two latter as follows:

Scientific Course—Nelle O. Heesen, Anna May Bailey, Fred J. Boyd, Mae Florence Woodward, Anna D. Hisley, Bert H. Baker, Lelma B. Stewart.

Latin Course—Loana M. Davidson, Mattie E. Hastings, Edyth Woodward, Fred J. McNair.

English Course—Royal A. DeWolf, Frances A. Kehoe, May E. Morrison.

Following are the Class Officers:
Pres.—Fred J. Boyd.
Vice Pres.—Anna M. Bailey.
Sec.—Lelma B. Stewart.
Treas.—Edyth Woodward.

The floral trimmings and general setting of the stage were exceedingly tasty. The front of the rostrum and the two corners were elegantly trimmed with evergreens and flowers. Ranged on the floor in front of the stage were 14 tables, one for each graduate, which were loaded down with floral mementoes and other gifts. The custom of presenting bouquets and floral pieces does not seem to wane, while the practice of giving books and other articles of value is decidedly on the increase. The floral tables contained many gifts of considerable worth. The class motto—"Not Finished, but Begun," in large silver letters, upon a blue background was suspended from the drop curtain.

Owing to the refractory condition of the gas lights there was some delay in getting started, but when once begun, the program proceeded very smoothly, and without the slightest hitch.

Benediction—Rev. F. Adkins.

The orations were all committed and spoken from memory. The musical part of the program was of a high order of merit. The best musical talent of Tecumseh was freely drawn upon, and both the vocal and instrumental selections were exceedingly fine. When all did so well, it seems invidious to make special mention of anyone. The class were fortunate in securing the assistance of Mr. Chas. B. Stevens, of Detroit, a vocalist of rare power. The solo by Mrs. A.W. James showed that her voice has lost none of its melody since she left the old home. Miss Elida James presided at the piano with exquisite taste and efficiency. Although the program was somewhat lengthy it held the undivided attention of the crowd until the benediction was pronounced. We herewith present in full the essays and orations of the graduates.

SALUTATORY.

BY EDYTH WOODWARD.

Dear friends and kind patrons—It is my pleasant duty this evening to extend to you in behalf of the class of '89 a most cordial and a most friendly welcome. We have climbed the successive rounds of the ladder which finally leads to the summit and are now ready to step upon the firm foundation on which we trust we have builded our education. Looking back over our school life we find that we have spent many a toilsome hour in gaining what we have now acquired. Yet they have not been entirely devoid of pleasure. Although we have often time felt discouraged in what seemed to us a useless study in our course, yet now we can see wherein it has been for our good and feel that all the courses of the school have been planned to our best advantage. To-night we are here to attend the closing exercises of the largest class that ever graduated from the Tecumseh High School. There are fourteen members of our class while twelve is the highest number ever before attained. We are not only the largest class, but according to our estimation, the brightest and best; we have been kept together more unitedly by our class spirit with which we were inspired by our early class organization. This class was organized early in '89 and none have left the original organization.

Owing to the size of the class, we have varied our program somewhat and allowed it to partake of both classday and commencement exercises—hence we have histories, prophecies, poems, etc. Trusting that our efforts this evening will both please and interest you, we give to you again one and all, our sincerest welcome.

FISHING.

BY ROYAL A. DEWOLF.

"All the World's a fishing ground, and the men and women are the anglers." Especially the women. This class has not been particularly noted for telling fish stories, but as fishing is a pastime in which all, undoubtedly, will participate, it is well to take different views of the subject. If we feel inclined to join a party who are about to start out on an extensive fishing expedition, it will not be necessary to look far. The class of '89 will soon be making some sort of a cast, and whether they hook a minnow or a muskelonge will depend largely upon their own efforts and the fishing ground they select. Most of the sterner and probably some of the fairer anglers, of this party, will soon be setting their nets with the hope of making a good catch in life. Some of the fair sex will erelong, be setting their hooks for some poor fish, and we sincerely hope that more of them will have the ill-luck to catch a sucker and think they have secured a prize.

The class of '89 are not the only fishermen, for thousands are starting out every day, some going in one direction and some in another, but the majority taking the Western streams in accordance with the common advice. "Go West, Young Man," for these streams are fresher and therefore have a greater attraction for the average American youth. The first fish caught by a young man or woman, starting out in life, is a species called a Position. There are several different kinds belonging to this class; such, as financial, social, political etc but if the first kind is caught it is usually easy enough to secure the others. A great many people are not satisfied if they succeed in taking a good position, but desire to try a new form of fishing called Speculation. The fish to be caught by this mode have such an epicurean taste, that they can only be allured by the most expensive bait; very often they succeed in taking all the bait, leaving the discomfitted angler with no further means for fishing. Some people desiring ease in life are not satisfied with common fish, but spend their time in seeking for snaps. These are seldom caught, particularly soft snaps, and it pays better to land whatever takes your bate, as "a fish in hand, is worth two in a stream." Quite often we see a young lady seized with a sudden affection for her paternal parent. He receives a great many affections before and after meals and before retiring. We naturally ask, "Is this entirely heartfelt"? Oh, no! this is only one way of fishing for a new dress or bonnet as the case may be. Men of ambitious natures after having amassed sufficient money, commence angling for the well known fish, Public Office. This can only be caught at certain seasons and hence a number of able men are employed to canvass the different streams and drive the fish within reach of the one who desires to capture it.

Sometimes the order of things is reversed and the fish takes a hand in the fishing. This is nicely illustrated by the well known story of Jonah and the Whale or more properly the Whale and Jonah. But the incident is so well known that if repeated might affect the audience as the Biblical Character did the Leviathan. There are a class of fish known as Land Sharks who also turn the tables and do the fishing. They haunt the county court houses and look over the records for a deed with a slight flaw in the title. They are only too well known to many a man who finds his property suddenly taken away without any compensation. Fishing as a pastime and business occupies the attention of a great many people and has recently been considered of sufficient importance to attract the attention of two great nations. But the fishery question has been settled; perhaps it will be well to close this piscatorial discourse. Before closing, however, it might be a good thing to remind housekeepers of the old story. That the surest way to keep fish from smelling during the heated period is—to cut off their noses.

INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION.

BY MATTIE E. HASTINGS.

Manual training in public schools does not provide a student with a trade, any more than it makes a boy a lawyer or a girl an editor, but it merely teaches him, under the direction of competent teachers, to train the hand to use lathe, saw and chisel. This lays the foundation for many a trade and awakens the genius of machinists, manufacturers and farmers. In Germany every person is compelled to learn a trade, every member of the royal family is a mechanic, but it is different in this country, as the present system of education tends to unfit the youth, for practical life. Not only is industrial training a good thing intellectually but a good thing for character. A little learning incites self-conceit, but practical training self-reliance. An idle brain is a devils work shop, but give the children something with which to occupy the mind and fix their attention and they will be kept from the clutches of vice. Perhaps you know that the disposition of boys, with a few exceptions, at the age of thirteen and fourteen years is to break away from school to enter a store, bank or factory, not to learn to work, but really for the purpose of making money. In the grammar schools the boys are in the same proportion as the girls, but in the High School a large percentage of the boys drop out entirely, hence the women of the coming generation are likely to be much better educated than the men, but this inequality cannot exist long without some evil results. As a boy's nature is peculiar, his work in life will be different from that of a girl's, his education should be as available for himself as the girls education is for herself. At the present time the boys and girls are sent out of the public schools nearly helpless for they are not adapted to any trade or business. The most ignorant man in one sense of the word, is the college graduate, for though he is developed intellectually, he is dwarfed as to the use of his hands; so this lamentable complaint can be made against the present system of education is that it is one sided, since it only partially prepares them for their life work.

For instance, on entering a school room you will find a pupil pouring over his Greek or Latin lesson, but however close he appears to be studying he will invariably find his mind to be wandering to the base ball ground and sporting field; but you enter a workshop you will find a boy of the same age, proceeding according to directions completing a piece of work, his mind does not wander for an instant or his work would be damaged, fingers cut or chisel broken. The very thing which education seeks is not found in the common system, as it does not require the close attention which is a necessary principal in manual training. Perhaps you will think that where this system of manual training is introduced in the schools the common studies are neglected, but this is not so; the time spent training the hand is the same recreation and incites the mind for study. Many educated men hold that hand labor is indispensable to the harmonious education of man. But what education really means no correct or conclusive answer has yet been given. The Greeks spent more time upon the training of the physical rather than the mental part of man. The Americans train the intellect; the English, German and French nations, have large standing armies, in which no less than half a million men serve from four to eight years, then retire to civil life. Their places are then filled by young and stronger men. By this means they educate their men to habits of industry.

Since the working men constitute the greater part of the population of America they have a just claim on the schools. Every one will admit that there is a discrepancy in wages in the country. Our institutions of learning then can counteract this in a measure by introducing such training as fit them for life work.

A number of years ago this lack of manual training was remedied to a certain degree by apprenticing a boy to learn a trade, but this is a thing of the past, as the factory is taking the place of industrial establishments. In the schools of manual training the girls are taught to be their own dress makers, to cook, and carve wood as the boy is taught his work, and when this system is introduced in all public schools, these bright and busy schools will be like stars in the firmament of advancing civilization.

CRANKS.

BY NELLE O. HEESEN.

One's first impression of the subject is that it is a part of machinery used to give rotary motion; again as applied to self confident persons, to those firmly set in their ways and ideas, or who do not think as we do. What would we do if it were not for the cranks? Would this world be in as progressive a state as it now is, had there been no such persons to help it along? Take for example some of the scientists or some of the politicians. Could we not call Columbus a crank on the subject of navigation and discovery? What would we have known of this continent had it not been for Columbus or some other persons likewise inclined? His fate was like that of many other persons, he was cast into prison and died a poor dishonored man. Take another instance, Benj. Franklin interested in electricity as connected with lightning. Both these men are honored in history, yet they died almost in poverty. We would be traveling on foot or in the lumbering stage coach if the locomotive had not been invented, which enables us to travel at the rate of 40 miles an hour. Fulton, another of this class also helped us in our travels by adapting the steam engine to boat propulsion. The late John Erickson the inventor of the screw propeller and builder of the boat called the "Monitor," remarked that if he had said in 1835, that nearly a dozen steamships would leave the port of N. Y. in one day, moved by his propeller that people would have called him a crank and locked him up as a lunatic, yet such is the case to day. The great electrician, Edison, has discovered that gas is an enemy to yellow fever, and that the leaky gas pipes will forever prevent the epidemic in N.Y. city. The fever is not quickly carried through the air, but travels along the ground at the rate of 42 feet per day. The fever would never make much progress in N. Y. on account of so much gas, and the prevalence of leaky gas pipes. This modern crank may yet be found in N. Y. city. All of the cranks are not securely fastened to the revolving shaft; they of the political order sometimes go off on a tangent, and are call "mugwumps." The abolitionists might have been called cranks, but by the agitation of the slave question, slavery was abolished. In fact, all the persons who think differently from us are cranks. Soon these poor despised ones will be known and honored the world over, while we will never be known outside of our own circle of friends unless we are fortunate enough to be one of them, and perhaps we could not be one if we would, for in order to be one of this class, it requires perseverance will power, decision and above all patience; all of these are qualities which every one possesses to a certain extent, though they may lie dormant all our lives unless developed by our own energies. There might more of us reach the goal, if we would always keep as our motto "Either I will find a way or make one." Many times our great desires transform possibilities into realities. The desires being merely the presentiment of what we may accomplish. Will power is a quality which was never more necessary than at the present time, for without it one would become like the nerveless shell fish of the ocean, which can only drift along with the tide. Thus we see that energy of will is one of the most important characters of man, creating strength in both mind and body.

The lack of patience is one of the great causes of failure; the majority of those who fail in life, are the ones who become discouraged, succumb to the little difficulties before the battle is fairly won. They lack faith and courage, they lose all hope and are impatient at the slow rewards of their toils. But until they have learned to "labor and to wait" none of them will succeed in life. Think not that you must be the possessor of wealth, in order to accomplish any desired object. Abraham Lincoln was of lowly origin. Did he not make himself all that he was? Was he not in many respects the grandest man ever President of the United States and who, by doing away with the slavery of man to man in America, rendered the American flag pure and lovely as the sky in which it floats? Do they call him a crank?

Does not our flag now float over almost as great a slavery? Man a slave to intoxicating beverages; and shall our future President, who sweeps this out of our country, be called a crank? All of the great men whom I have mentioned, began life at the foot of the ladder; they were obliged to work their own way, slowly through many trials and difficulties. It was only through their perseverance and patience that they reached the top after many years.

Then let us not deal too harshly with these persons, if we are unable to see things as they see them. But, let us be charitable. It makes but little difference in the end what names are employed, as long as the good work goes grandly forward. Rev. Sam Jones has been termed a crank and fanatic, yet see the work accomplished by him. Thus we see in almost all devisions of labor some of our greatest, some of our most distinguished men classified here.

Then let us study carefully our own lives, and discover if possible our own deficiences. Without doubt, if we were of the class mentioned our influence would be greater and the world be wiser and better as the poet Bailey has said. "Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie, which we ascribe to heaven. The fated sky only backward pulls when we ourselves are dull. Walk boldly and wisely in that light thou hast, there is a hand above will lead thee on."

SENIOR RECOLLECTIONS.

BY BERT H. BAKER.

Senior:—Only six letters, yet what a train of recollections it brings to mind. A thread of remembrance wound up like a ball of yarn, unwindable from either end. With what varying emotions we watch the unwinding of that ball, beginning with our first High School days.

How well we remember that, to us, eventful September morning four years ago when we first entered the High School impressed with our own dignity and supposed greatness.

But the fancies of those days have vanished in the dim vista of the past.

There were forty nine of us then—fourteen of us now.

Some took shorter courses and have already graduated, some have moved away and gone to other schools, some have gone into business, one is married, but, I am happy to say none are dead. Surely no Freshmen were ever fresher than those of eighty-six, no Sophomores softer than those of '87, no Juniors as jolly as those of '88 and no Seniors less dignified than those of '89.

The history of a class usually is, I believe, like that of a nation, a chronicle of its great deeds, its noble victories, its mighty achievments, but if that were the only reason for writing this history I am almost inclined to think that there would never have been a history of the class of '89. But it has always been the regret of the world that it knows so little of the school life of its great men and women. Many are the reporters who have haunted the little red school-houses, belonging to former years, in vain hope of learning something of the school life of our Presidents, President's wives, Senators and Statesmen. And who knows but what some day the reporter of the Tecumseh HERALD or NEWS shall be searching the records of the High School over and over for some incident connected with the school days of our greatest Statesmen or of some President of the Belva Lockwood persuasion. And it was in the anticipation of some such event that the writing of this history was undertaken. As I said, there were forty nine of us when we first entered the High School; indeed our numbers were so large and formidable that at first we were put under the rule of a Lyon, but as the years went by our numbers so decreased, that for the last three we have been under the gentle suasion of a Lamb. This class is composed of members a majority of whom come from different localities. As for instance our president, Fred Boyd, first learned to read and write in a little school house up among the Sand Lake hills; but having a desire to do something more worthy the smile of Fame than to stay on the farm, he joined the class in its second year. Anna Bailey and Loana Davidson both went to country schools for a while, the former in Macon, the latter in East Tecumseh. May Woodward, Nellie Heesen and Mattie Hastings all had their young ideas taught how to shoot in that little brick schoolhouse over in Brownville generally known as the North branch. Frances Kehoe has been with us the shortest time, she having only joined the class last October and has completed the High School course in two years. Lelma Stewart, Edyth Woodward and Fred McNair all began the study of the three Rs, 'reading, 'riting and 'rithmetic, in the East Branch building, while May Morrison, Roy DeWolf and Anna Hisley all took Primer lessons in the old West Branch building, now torn down.

We have the distinction of being the largest class ever graduated from the Tecumseh High School and surely we ought to be victorious in the battles of life, since we have in our numbers two brave soldier boys of Co. C., and should our paths in life lead us seaward, landward or Woodward we shall not be in danger of loosing our way as we have two bright and shining lights borne high aloft by May Morrison and "Reddy" Stewart. These are, I think, sufficient guarrantee that our path shall ever be Hisley illuminated. And although De Wolf lurks near we are protected by one of "David's" sons with the little sling with which the ancestor of old so effectually "laid out" Goliath.

And now the time has come when we must say good bye. Good-bye to our school days, the happiest days of our lives. An untried future lies before us, it is ours to make or mar. As yet we know nothing about it for we have "Not Finished, only Begun."

"So loath we part from all we love,
From all the ties that bind us,
So turn our hearts as on we move
To those we've left behind us;
While memory brings us back again
Each early tie that timed us
We turn to catch one fading ray
Of the joy that's left behind us."

TO BE OR NOT TO BE.

BY ANNA MAY BAILEY

To be or not to be and what to be; that is the question which now confronts fourteen young persons, not one of whom is disposed to suffer calmly the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune, but all alike ready to take arms against a sea or even an ocean of troubles. The world is all before us, where to choose. The professions, and I was about to say, the privileges are open alike to girls and boys; forgetting the tenacity with which man still clings to what he seems to consider his own special prerogative—the right to vote. He denies the privilege of citizenship to his intelligent mother, sister and wife, but grants it fully and freely, without decent delay, to a herd of imported Hungarians and Poles, who do not know the name of the man for whom they are to vote and could not pronounce it if they did, or even read it when printed on the ballot they deposit, while women like Julia Ward Howe, Maria Mitchell Mrs. Crowley and scores of others, whose genuine patriotism and glorious lives are part of the fame and history of this country, stand afar off and scarcely dare lift their eyes toward the sacred place. But let them keep the ballot to themselves; I don't know as we want it. This may remind you of the fox and the grapes, but indeed I am not certain that we would always exercise the right if we had it. It passes all understanding why everyone else in this land of the free and home of the brave should be allowed to dictate and advise nominations, vote as often as convenient opportunity presents, save only Chinese, Indians, idiots and women. Such knowledge is too high for us; it is wonderful, we cannot attain unto it. It requires the profoundest sagacity of the masculine intellect to discern why this is as it is and their lips are resolutely sealed. So we will not enter the political field just yet, but stand outside with the rest of the disfranchised and peruse the political papers for information in regard to the inestimable blessings of Protection, the incomparable advantages of Free Trade, etc., until we are considered as eligible in the eyes of our lords and masters as Patrick and Hans, six months after landing at Castle Garden. If the nineteenth century girl is not to be allowed a voice in the affairs of the nation, there are many other things natural and fitting to which a young woman can aspire. The same things would have been considered improper and impossible fifty years ago. She need no longer be a lay figure on which to hang dry goods and jewelry to illustrate the fashions.

God has given woman certain qualifications and the world needs their best use, having learned by experience that if every young woman in the land should duly cultivate and make effective her own especial gift, society would not explode, the moon would not be darkened and the sun would still shed light. A great author once said "there is not one thing that men ought to do, there is not one thing that ought to be done which a woman ought not to be encouraged to do if she has the capacity for doing it. For wherever there is a gift there is a prophecy pointing to its use, and a silent command of God to use it." Heretofore the specialities of women have been limited but in the genial atmosphere of a more enlightened era they have expanded and increased. The popular idea of a few years ago, that it was womanly to be delicate and helpless, is obsolete, and the co-education of brain and muscle has done as much and even more for her than for her brother. And though we can never be man's equal in physical strength yet we can offset force of muscle by force of heart. What they have done to subdue the material world for us, we shall achieve for them in rendering home pleasant and attractive. To make a conclusion of the whole matter we have only to be what God pleases, to do the duty that lies nearest to us and wait patiently for the day that is surely coming when the right of all women in all lands, to the highest knowledge, shall be recognized as equal to that of any man beneath the shining sun.

BRIDGES.

BY LOANA M. DAVIDSON.

The old proverb, "Necessity is the mother of invention," has been proven true in ancient as well as in modern times. Our forefathers found it necessary to devise some means of crossing small streams and rivers, and although rude at first, passage ways were constructed from which our modern bridges sprung. The familiar stepping stones still so often used in crossing small streams need no description, yet do not despise them even if through their use you are treated to a sudden cold bath, for when some ingenious youth conceived the idea of placing boards or trees on the stones, lo! there sprang into being the embryo from which developed our modern arch bridge. Pontoon bridges were used in the fifth century. What student of history does not feel a thrill of admiration in recalling the scene where Xerxes by means of his mile long double bridge of boats crossed the Hellespont with his magnificent army. In Venice a covered passage leads from the Doge's palace to a dreary prison over which condemned prisoners passed to the hall of judgment and then recrossed again between two massive columns of red granite to the place of execution. Truly a "Bridge of Sighs."

America also can boast of some renowned as well as ingeniously constructed bridges. First the corduroy; our own experience in crossing such roads leads to the conclusion that pleasure traveling in days before carriage springs were invented must have been attended with drawbacks. As other things advanced the science of building bridges also progressed until America can boast of some of the finest structures in the world. The famous Brooklyn bridge had her misfortunes connected with its construction. The engineer was fatally injured and his son, A. Roebling, took charge of the work but he was prostrated with a fever which destroyed the nerves of motion; in never his mental faculties remained unimpaired and through the mediation of his wife he was able to carry on the work. We can barely mention the Cantilever bridge which spans the fathomless chasm of the Niagara and not even name many bridges made ready by nature's own hand to add grandeur to our land-scapes. There are only a few material bridges of sordid iron, plank and stone fashioned by workman's skill, but there are others made without hands, the structure of which it is impossible to describe and some of which we must cross daily; namely "The Bridges of Life." First comes the Bridge of Infancy. How little a child realizes what an important step he has taken when he can for the first time stand alone but, it leads to still greater accomplishments until

Standing with reluctant feet
Where the brook and river meet Womanhood and Childhood fleet.

and we are ready to leave one bridge only to begin the crossing of another more difficult than the first. School life bridges over the expanse between infancy and manhood. And then we find before us that great and renowned bridge, Life. Peering out we see the vast ocean over which stretches two bridges both made up of innumerable smaller ones. The one narrow straight but firm; and sunshine and storms, perseverance and victory are imprinted on the brows of its pilgrims. The other wide and inviting but with weak foundations, and with idleness, pleasure and failure plainly expressed on the countenances of its travelers. But as he nears the end of this journey of life, the travelers feet become feeble, wearied by the long journey and as he takes the last tottering step he sees before him that often foretold Gulf of Death. There is only one way to cross this. Many hundred years ago there was no bridge over these seething waters but God saw our need and provided a way that we might cross safely to the other shore. All, alas! are not willing to cross the bridge built after God's plan of salvation. Numberless persons from the broad way and even some from the narrow way board the beautiful yacht that floats the banner "Not God's will, but man's be done." We watch the frail craft glide out of the quiet harbor into the raging waves and our eyes follow it until we see it caught in the whirlpool where it sinks never to rise again, but those who pursue their way over the bridge built by Christ with the banner of victory floating o'er them forget their former trials and near the end see a bright and shining land before them and a band of angels to welcome them home.

To-night, we, as students stand on the brink of one of the most important bridges of Life. We have passed the bridges of school life and have trod the planks of patience, discouragement, perseverance and victory; although the way seemed rough to our feet, yet we knew that the foundations were firm and that armed with the passport "perseverance" we should with honor join those who had trod the same path and who now in recalling their school days forget the toilsomeness of the journey and think only of the flowers that bloomed by the wayside. And now as we cross the last arch, success, our hearts beat with anxiety for the future. We can only test the wisdom of the old adage "Don't cross the bridge before you until the bridge is reached."

OUR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

BY LELMA B. STEWART.

Notwithstanding the much talked of high grade of our schools and colleges of to-day, the question arises: Did not the log schools of fifty years ago turn out as many if not more noted men in proportion to the number attending than are graduated from our high schools of to day? Did not the college of 1800, though hard pressed for the necessary funds and ill provided with philosophical and chemical apparatus, fit more who were prepared to struggle against life's current than do the higher institutions of to-day? Many professionals come from our colleges of to-day, but professionals in what? Base ball pitchers, oarsmen, wrestlers, etc. Where do we find our Websters, Stephens, Phillips and such men? They must have gone upon a regatta up the river Styx. In reviewing the lives of the older orators and statesmen who have or are about to leave the stage of public action we find men who with only the advantages of a log school house and a short college career have made themselves great in our country's history. Next we view the heads of the principal manufacturing establishments and commercial houses of our country. Who are they?. In general they are men who with meagre education have slowly climbed the ladder of fortune and now control heavy interests in our country's welfare. Next we notice the farmers, many of whom had little or no education. Now they have valuable farms and leave at their death rich estates to the colleges. Moreover in looking over Bradstreets Commercial report it will be found that the names of the junior members in the majority of the large manufactories and flourishing establishments are the names of foreigners. Why is it that there are not more young men, native Americans, taking the place of the older ones that are stepping out? Why this supplanting of the American young man by those of foreign birth or parentage in business circles? A few of the many reasons are these:

From fifty to one hundred years ago a boy thought himself lucky if his parents were able to send him to school two or three months in the year between the ages of ten and sixteen and should he have the advantages of going farther, from six to nine months preparation in an academy, he was ready for college and in nine cases out of ten he had to work his own way if he went any farther. Under such circumstances he realized the necessity of close application, when he was not earning something to sustain him. At home and in college he was given credit for what he did and no more, as he had no monied influences and boodling was not a fashion. Having depended upon self and being unmolested by social pleasures he knew what he had gone over. Now a scholar spends ten years in a common school, if he then wishes to go farther he must take two years in a preparatory school and then enter college. Many go, not to learn but because it is fashionable. His board is paid, he has spending money, he never studies out of school for it does

The Great War Syndicate.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON.

Author of "Rudder Grange," "Amos Kilbright," "The Bee Man of Orn," "The Christmas Wreck," "The Lady or the Tiger," "The Late Mrs. Null," "The Hundredth Man," "The Casting Away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine," "The Dusantes," etc.

When night came on Repeller No. 11 and the crabs dropped down with the tide and lay to some miles west of the scene of battle. The fog shut them in fairly well, but, fearful that torpedoes might be sent out against them, they showed no lights. There was little danger of collision with passing merchantmen, for the English channel at present was deserted by this class of vessels.

The next morning the repeller, preceded by two crabs, bearing between them a submerged net similar to that used at the Canadian port, appeared off the eastern end of the Isle of Wight. The anchors of the net were dropped, and behind it the repeller took her place, and shortly afterward she sent a flag of truce boat to Portsmouth harbor. This boat carried a note from the American war syndicate to the British government.

In this note it was stated that it was now the intention of the syndicate to utterly destroy, by means of the instantaneous motor, a fortified post upon the British coast. As this would be done solely for the purpose of demonstrating the irresistible destructive power of the motor bombs, it was immaterial to the syndicate what fortified post should be destroyed, provided it should answer the requirements of the proposed demonstration. Consequently the British government was offered the opportunity of naming the fortified place which should be destroyed. If said government should decline to do this or delay the selection for twenty-four hours, the syndicate would itself decide upon the place to be operated upon.

Every one in every branch of the British government, and, in fact, nearly every thinking person in the British islands, had been racking his brains, or her brains, that night, over the astounding situation; and the note of the syndicate only added to the perturbation of the government. There was a strong feeling in official circles that the insolent little enemy must be crushed, if the whole British navy should have to rush upon it, and all sink together in a common grave.

But there were cooler and more prudent brains at the head of affairs; and these had already decided that the contest between the old engines of war and the new was entirely one sided. The instincts of good government dictated to them that they should be extremely wary and circumspect during the further continuance of this unexampled war. Therefore, when the note of the syndicate was considered, it was agreed that the time had come when good statesmanship and wise diplomacy would be more valuable to the nation than torpedoes, armored ships or heavy guns.

There was not the slightest doubt that the country would disagree with the government, but on the latter lay the responsibility of the country's safety. There was nothing, in the opinion of the ablest naval officers, to prevent the syndicate's fleet from coming up the Thames. Instantaneous motor bombs could sweep away all forts and citadels and explode and destroy all torpedo defenses, and London might lie under the guns of the repeller.

In consequence of this view of the state of affairs an answer was sent to the syndicate's note asking that further time be given for the consideration of the situation, and suggesting that an exhibition of the power of the motor bomb was not necessary, as sufficient proof of this had been given in the destruction of the Canadian forts, the annihilation of the Craglevin, and the extraordinary results of the discharge of said bombs on the preceding day.

To this a reply was sent from the office of the syndicate in New York by means of a cable boat from the French coast, that on no account could their purpose be altered or their propositions modified. Although the British government might be convinced of the power of the syndicate's motor bombs, it was not the case with the British people, for it was yet popularly disbelieved that motor bombs existed. This disbelief the syndicate was determined to overcome, not only for the furtherance of its own purposes, but to prevent the downfall of the present British ministry, and a probable radical change in the government. That such a political revolution, as undesirable to the syndicate as to cool headed and sensible Englishmen, was imminent, there could be no doubt. The growing feeling of disaffection, almost amounting to disloyalty, not only in the opposition party, but among those who had hitherto been firm adherents of the government, was mainly based upon the idea that the present British rulers had allowed themselves to be frightened by mines and torpedoes, artfully placed and exploded. Therefore the syndicate intended to set right the public mind upon this subject. The note concluded by earnestly urging the designation, without loss of time, of a place of operations.

This answer was received in London in the evening, and all night it was the subject of earnest and anxious deliberation in the government office. It was at last decided, amid great opposition, that the syndicate's alternative must be accepted, for it would be the height of folly to allow the repeller to bombard any port she should choose. When this conclusion had been reached, the work of selecting a place for the proposed demonstration of the American syndicate occupied but little time. The task was not difficult. Nowhere in Great Britain was there a fortified spot of so little importance as Caerdaff, on the west coast of Wales.

Caerdaff consisted of a large fort on a promontory and an immense castellated structure on the other side of a small bay, with a little fishing village at the head of said bay. The castellated structure was rather old, the fortress somewhat less so; and both had long been considered useless, as there was no probability that an enemy would land at this point on the coast.

Caerdaff was therefore selected as the spot to be operated upon. No one could for a moment imagine that the syndicate had mined this place, and if it should be destroyed by motor bombs it would prove to the country that the government had not been frightened by the tricks of a crafty enemy.

An hour after the receipt of the note in which it was stated that Caerdaff had been selected, the syndicate's fleet started for that place. The crabs were elevated to cruising height, the repeller taken in tow, and by the afternoon of the next day the fleet was lying off Caerdaff. A note was sent on shore to the officer in command, stating that the bombardment would begin at 10 o'clock in the morning of the next day but one, and requesting that information of the hour appointed be instantly transmitted to London. When this had been done, the fleet steamed six or seven miles off shore, where it lay to or cruised about for two nights and a day.

As soon as the government had selected Caerdaff for bombardment immediate measures were taken to remove the small garrisons and the inhabitants of the fishing village from possible danger. When the syndicate's note was received by the commandant of the fort he was already in receipt of orders from the war office to evacuate the fortifications and to superintend the removal of the fishermen and their families to a point of safety farther up the coast.

Caerdaff was a place difficult of access by land, the nearest railroad stations being fifteen or twenty miles away, but on the day after the arrival of the syndicate's fleet in the offing thousands of people made their way to this part of the country, anxious to see—if perchance they might find an opportunity to safely see—what might happen at 10 o'clock the next morning. Officers of the army and navy, government officials, press correspondents in great numbers, and curious and anxious observers of all classes, hastened to the Welsh coast.

The little towns where the visitors left the trains were crowded to overflowing, and every possible conveyance by which the mountains lying back of Cardiff could be reached was eagerly secured, many persons, however, being obliged to depend upon their own legs. Soon after sunrise of the appointed day the forts, the village and the surrounding lower country were entirely deserted; and every point of vantage on the mountains lying some miles back from the coast was occupied by excited spectators, nearly every one armed with a field glass.

A few of the guns from the fortifications were transported to an overlooking height, in order that they might be brought into action in case the repeller, instead of bombarding, should send men in boats to take possession of the evacuated fortifications, or should attempt any mining operations. The gunners for this battery were stationed at a safe place to the rear, whence they could readily reach their guns if necessary.

The next day was one of supreme importance to the syndicate. On this day it must make plain to the world, not only what the motor bomb could do, but that the motor bomb did what was done. Before leaving the English channel the director of Repeller No. 11 had received telegraphic advices from both Europe and America indicating the general drift of public opinion in regard to the recent sea fight; and, besides these, many English and continental papers had been brought to him from the French coast.

From all these the director perceived that the cause of the syndicate had in a certain way suffered from the manner in which the battle in the channel had been conducted. Every newspaper urged that if the repeller carried guns capable of throwing the bombs which the syndicate proposed to use there was no reason why every ship in the British fleet should not have been destroyed. But as the repeller had not fired a single shot at the fleet, and as the battle had been fought entirely by the crabs, there was every reason to believe that if there were such things as motor guns their range was very short, not as great as that of the ordinary dynamite cannon. The great risk run by one of the crabs in order to disable a dynamite gunboat seemed an additional proof of this.

It was urged that the explosions in the water might have been produced by torpedoes; that the torpedo boat which had been destroyed was so near the repeller that an ordinary shell was sufficient to accomplish the damage that had been done.

To gainsay these assumptions was imperative on the syndicate's forces. To firmly establish the prestige of the instantaneous motor was the object of the war. Crabs were of but temporary service. Any nation could build vessels like them, and there were many means of destroying them. The spring armor was a complete defense against ordinary artillery, but it was not a defense against submarine torpedoes. The claims of the syndicate could be firmly based on nothing but the powers of absolute annihilation possessed by the instantaneous motor bomb.

About 9 o'clock on the appointed morning Repeller No. 11 much to the surprise of the spectators on the high grounds with field glasses and telescopes, steamed away from Caerdaff. What this meant nobody knew, but the naval military observers immediately suspected that the syndicate's vessel had concentrated attention upon Caerdaff in order to go over to Ireland to do some sort of mischief there. It was presumed that the crabs accompanied her, but as they were now at their fighting depth it was impossible to see them at so great a distance.

But it was soon perceived that Repeller No. 11 had no intention of running away, nor of going over to Ireland. From slowly cruising about four or five miles off shore she had steamed westward until she had reached a point which, according to the calculations of her scientific corps, was nine marine miles from Caerdaff. There she lay to against a strong breeze from the east.

It was not yet 10 o'clock when the officer in charge of the starboard gun remarked to the director that he supposed that it would not be necessary to give the smoke signals, as had been done in the channel, as now all the crabs were lying near them. The director reflected a moment, and then ordered that the signal should be given at every discharge of the gun, and that the columns of black smoke should be shot up to their greatest

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we recive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your lire. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. WRITING MACHINE CABINET and OFFICE DESK

For Remington, Hammond, and Crandall Type Writer.

The advantages of this Type-writer and Office Desk over all other so-called Combination Cabinets, are: First.—The ease and simplicity with which the desk is changed from a Library or Office Desk to a Type-writer Table. This change is effected by pushing the lid covering the machine back in the rear of cabinet—it being a roller top—removing it entirely from sight, thus overcoming the objectionable board and sounder in front of the operator. The movable top is perfectly flat, is baize covered, and forms a complete writing desk when the machine is not in use. The table on which the machine rests is so evenly balanced by our patent adjustments that it needs but a slight touch to bring the machine in position.

Second.—The advantages of the swinging table are: The table is so balanced near its center on patent maleable iron arms, that when the machine brought in place for use, it does not depend on ropes or hangers at rear of platform for support, but is held rigidly in place by its own weight, making it impossible for the machine to be tumbled down an incline in back of desk by the breaking of a rear support. The machine rests on patent slides which keeps the machine in place, and can be drawn out beyond the desk, well under the operator's hand.

Third.—The construction of the lid closing machine space makes it air tight, and the table having felt around its boarders thoroughly protects the machine from dust.

Fourth.—The foot rest and the construction of the table adjustments makes the desk as ridged as though the top was one solid board, which is a matter of great importance where a solid type-writing table is required. No operator can do good work on a shaky table.

Lastly.—The cabinet is a splendid piece of cabinet work. We manufacture them in Walnut, Antique Oak, Natural Oak, Natural Cherry, Cherry imitation, Mahogany and Ash.

Agents wanted to sell these cabinets, and where we have no agents we will sell direct from our works at wholesale prices.

The Single Apron Improvement.

Its striking advantages are—three rollers as compared with six; one canvas versus three; six bearings as compared with twelve; three buckles versus twelve. The draft of the machine is thereby very materially reduced. The apron is driven from the underside, hence the upper side or top of apron is comparatively loose and easily passes, without friction, under the apron guides.

The only Binder adjustments on the Wood are the three desirable ones—Regulating size of Bundle—Regulating tightness of Binding—Regulating position of Band. Each of these adjustments is made instantly.

The new Enclosed Gear Mower is the best mower ever made.

Some of those who attended the fireworks at Britton the fourth, became so much under the control of forty rod, that their wives and children, after waiting until a late hour for them, walked home leaving their companions behind, the worse for wear.

N. M. Hindes having been called from home on business Friday, expecting to be gone until Monday, put in an appearance Saturday evening unexpectedly and found his wife and children had hitched the family horse to the double shay and gone out for a drive. When they were returning home the horse became frightened and ran for a short distance, scaring the occupants somewhat, but not doing any damage. Mrs. Hindes thinks she will walk next time Nathaniel has business away and does not know when he will be home.

The officers of the ladies church social, in behalf of its members, desire to return a vote of thanks to Mrs. Hall and family for their part of the proceeds received from the entertainment given at their place, June 21st. Friday night being the first meeting they have had since, no action could be taken before.

FRANKLIN FACTS.

Louie Langdon is, to say the least, no better. Her patience is very touching, when her tender years and the long weeks that have rolled into months since she was able to be out, are considered. Mrs. Langdon's health is much improved since their return to their farm.

Martin Whelan who was so far recovered as to be able to be out, has had another attack of the disease which has again prostrated him, July 7th, however he was feeling better again.

Uncle Perry Allen met with a disappointment last week. He expected his only living brother and daughter, Mary, from Litchfield, to spend the 4th with him; a letter since received states that the evening before the intended start, Mrs. Dobson got a bad fall, hurting her side so that she is unable to turn herself in bed. The two brothers—one past 90 years of age and the other fast approaching it—were sorely disappointed.

A letter received from Mrs. C. L. Taggett, Caro, Mich., formerly Addie Allen, tells of the very bad state of health of her husband. Mr. T. lost his health in the army but has always been an active business man in spite of it until a year or two past. A long projected visit to Franklin has been delayed on account of this.

The picnic in Mr. Bramble's grove the 5th was a very enjoyable affair. The men and boys amused themselves with base ball, in which the Iron Creek nine got the better of their elders. Quoits were also indulged in. A bountiful collation had been prepaired by the ladies and the table fairly groaned beneath its weight of good things. The quality of the pastry showed Franklin cooks to be second to none anywhere and the variety of meats, pickles and relishes of all kinds, must have tickled the most fastidious palate. Ice cream and lemonade were also served.

Don't forget the Literary at Will Witherell's Saturday night.

GORED BY A BULL.

Yesterday evening, just before supper time, Mr. George Leute, who owns 160 acres of the choicest land about Lenawee Junction, situated one and a half miles east of that station, started from the hay field to attend to the cattle, as has been his custom.

When the call for supper came, no response could be had, and a diligent search was made for him, and his children were horrified to find his mangled remains lying in a ditch running through a lane on the farm, a few rods from the house.

He was cold in death, and it was evident that he had become the victim of the infuriated charges of a maddened bull, which had been allowed to run loose among the other cattle.

A deep cut was discovered on his right leg, and his right side had been opened by the horns of the animal, so that his intestines protruded. An awful rip ran the full length of the right side of his head, and he was otherwise lacerated and disfigured.

The remains were gathered up and carried to the house, where they received the ministrations of sympathizing neighbors and friends.

Deceased was 66 years old, and had been a resident of this county for sixteen years. He owned one of the best farms in Lenawee county, well stocked and supplied with ample buildings. A wife and six children survive him. Mr. John Leute, for ten years an employe of Mr. Christ Fluegel of this city, was a son of the deceased.—Adrian Times.

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

Deserving Confidence.

It is quite surprising to notice the numerous reports of remarkable cases of nervous diseases cured, such as headache, fits, nervous prostration, heart affections, St. Vitus Dance, insanity and prologed sleeplessness, by Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine. This new and improved brain and nerve food, and medicine, is everywhere gaining a remarkable reputation for curing the worst of these diseases, as well as the injourous effects of worry, nervous irritation, mental and physical overwork. Baker & Hall the druggists, will give away trial bottles of this wonderful remedy. It positively contains no opium or morphine.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, JULY 11

FORAKER RENOMINATED.

Named for Governor by Ohio Republicans in Convention Assembled.

COLUMBUS, O., June 27.—Without asking for it—in fact, in face of a statement that he did not want it—and even without the formality of his name being put before the convention, Governor Foraker was renominated at the Republican convention yesterday. It was evident at the last convention that the Ohio wing of the Republican party had no objection to third terms for governor, and yesterday they beat the record, for the honor done Governor Foraker was done for the fourth time. No other Ohio man has ever been given four, or even three, consecutive nominations for governor, and his grasp on the Republicans of the state is apparently stronger than ever. All of the anti-Foraker men behaved handsomely in the convention, and the convention seemed to break up in harmony.

Organization and Nominations.

The convention met at 9:30 a. m., and the permanent organization was soon completed by making the temporary organization continuous. The resolutions telegraphed yesterday were read and adopted unanimously, the indorsement of the utterances of the national convention of 1888 being considered sufficient on the subject of civil service reform, and heading off any attempt to get up a fight on that point. Nominations for governor were then called for, and the following were named: E. L. Lampson, of Ashtabula; Wilson Vance, of Hancock; Ashbel Jones, of Medina; R. R. Dawes, of Marietta; Joseph W. O'Neal, of Warren; J. B. Neil, of Columbus; R. P. Kennedy, and Joseph O'Neil, of Lebanon. No mention of Governor Foraker's name was made.

Balloting for Governor.

The nominating speeches were finished at 12:30 and the balloting commenced. The first ballot was as follows: Foraker 207, Kennedy 127, Dawes 96, O'Neal 59, Lampson 88, Jones 96, Morey 47, Vance 45, Neil 37, Gibson 23, Bushell 1.

On the second ballot Foraker captured the convention, and all the counties rushed to get into line. The friends of all the other candidates moved to make Foraker's nomination unanimous and it was done. This makes the fourth nomination Foraker has had for governor, and it came to him unsolicited.

Other Nominations.

E. L. Lampson, of Ashtabula county, was nominated for lieutenant governor on first ballot. Judge Dickman, the present incumbent, was renominated for supreme court judge. J. P. Brown was nominated for treasurer, and Attorney General Watson, the present officer, was also renominated. W. M. Hahn was renominated for member of board of public works.

Will Have Plenty of Constitution.

SIOUX FALLS, D. T., July 6.—The constitutional convention yesterday elected the officers nominated by the Republican caucus Thursday night and unanimously adopted the constitution of the United States as a part of the state constitution. The question of appointing a committee to act with one from the North Dakota convention for a division of the territory's property and debts was made a special order for to-day.

Montana.

HELENA, M. T., July 6.—The constitutional convention met at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon and effected a permanent organization. Hon. W. A. Clark, Democrat, was elected president. No further business of importance was transacted and the convention soon adjourned for the day.

Bold Bank Robbery at Ligonier, Ind.

LIGONIER, Ind., July 3.—A bold bank robbery was perpetrated here yesterday. While the cashier of Sol Mier's bank was at dinner some unknown thief entered the bank through a side window and rifled the cash drawer. Fortunately the vault was locked, and the thief had to be content with something less than $1,000. The window through which entrance was effected is but a few feet from the street and in plain view of every passer-by. The thief got away undetected.

Incendiary Blaze at Danbury, Conn.

WATERBURY, Conn., July 6.—An incendiary fire at Danbury at 1:30 o'clock Saturday morning destroyed D. H. Meeker's grain elevator, Meeker's ice house adjoining and the hat case factory of Theodore Clark & Co. Mr. Meeker's loss is $10,000. The loss on Clark's factory amounts to $30,000; insured for $24,000. The residents of Danbury are very indignant over this fire and declare that some miscreant is endeavoring to burn the town. Daniel McCreedy has been arrested on suspicion.

Disastrous Flood in Texas.

FORT WORTH, Tex., July 5.—The Trinity river is higher than since 1866, and is between three and four miles wide in places. The damage in this city is slight, but the loss to the railroads and suburban property will be $1,500,000. A Mrs. Bentley and her son Patrick were drowned. Much damage has been done to the crops.

Gen. Sherman's Son a Deacon.

PHILADELPHIA, July 6.—Thomas Ewing Sherman, the eldest son of Gen. William T. Sherman, was raised to the order of subdeacon yesterday by Archbishop Ryan. To-day he had the order of deacon conferred upon him, and on Sunday will have that of priest. This is the culmination of eleven years of hard work and study in the Society of Jesus.

Death of an Indiana Republican.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., July 5.—Col. William M. Hoggatt, of Booneville, Ind., was stricken with paralysis at Newburg, near this city last evening and died last night. He was one of the leading Republicans of the First district, and was a partner of Congressman Posey.

John C. Mathis was on Friday appointed assistant United States attorney for the southern district of Illinois.

Bloody Riot at Duluth

Strikers and Police Exchange a Hot Fusillade.

ONE MAN DEAD AND FIFTY INJURED

Several Others Have Probably Fatal Wounds—A Handful of Officers Attacked by 2,000 Rioting Laborers—An Attempt to Assault the Non-Strikers the Immediate Cause of the Trouble—Names of the Dead and a Number of the Wounded.

DULUTH, Minn., July 8.—A strike was begun in this city on July 2 which on Saturday gave Duluth her first baptism of blood. The trouble was first with the gas and water company's employes, who demanded $1.75 per day for labor instead of $1.50, which they had been getting. They were joined as the week went on by nearly all the other laborers in town. There were, however, a few who would not quit work, and the police have been guarding these men from attack by the strikers, who were eager to get at them. The police protection was sufficient until Saturday afternoon, but the chances of a riot were so good that Governor Merriam had ordered Company K of the state militia to be in readiness for a sudden call.

The Strikers Gather a Mob.

About 4:30 p. m. Saturday a mob of strikers, headed by a number of hot-blooded men, rallied and started for a sewer trench where about seventy laborers were at work guarded by about thirty policemen, and made a rush for the cordon of police. The police drew clubs and revolvers. Seeing that there was no use to bother with clubs, they fired into the angry mob, who also carried clubs, pistols and stones. A volley was fired and one striker lay dead, while seven more were wounded, some most seriously. One policeman was shot in return through the jaw.

How the Fight Began.

The strikers started from Twentieth avenue, while another body came down from Third street by Fifth avenue, and made a rush with clubs and stones. The police stood their ground, and then the carnage began. Who did the firing first is not known. As the strikers made a rush a single shot was fired. Then crack, crack, crack went the rifles of the police, followed by a fusillade from the strikers' revolvers. After the first fire came an awful hush, as though the combatants were appalled at the awful result of their work. On the walk in front of Piedmont, as it joins Garfield avenue, lay a man, shot through the heart; several more were bleeding from ghastly wounds.

An Hour of Fusillade.

The fight broke loose again, and the strikers, stationing themselves around the buildings in different parts of the block between Garfield and Eighteenth avenues, poured in a steady fire on the police, who were stationed near the sewer ditch. From 4 o'clock until after 5 the horrible work went on, and the battle did not withhold its fury long enough for the wounded to leave the field. It was after 5 o'clock when the last shot was fired and terrible indeed had been the result. Over thirty were known to have been wounded, and two innocent victims, who were there only out of curiosity, paid for their temerity with their lives.

The Dead and Wounded.

Following is a partial list of the victims: George Peterson, died in hospital; Edward Johnson, dead, shot through the brain; two unknown, shot dead; Thomas Fitzsimmons, dead, shot through the back and kidney; Mat Maxson, fatally wounded, shot through right thigh and groin; Lewis Nelson, shot in leg; Severin Nelson, shot in head, not fatal; Michael Olsen, seriously, several bullet wounds; George Costen, street-car driver, serious, bullet wounds in shoulder; John Shay, slightly, one finger shot off; Edward Cummings, will recover, three bayonet wounds in pit of stomach; Police Capt. McLaughlin, not serious, bullet through hip; Officer Walkoviak, shot in hip; Officer Donovan, shot through hip and face; Police Sergeant Clements, wounds in wrist and hand; Officer Kilgore, shot through shoulder; Militiaman Farrell, slight breast wound by bursting gun; Officer Force, wounded by stone; Officer Mee, shot in side, slight.

The Militia at the Scene.

The militia being ready and waiting it did not take long to bring them to the scene of the fight, but from one cause or another they did not get there for an hour after it began. The angry mob was still in position in the side streets and houses when the soldiers, taken to the field in furiously driven vehicles, made their appearance. Dismounting, an order was given to load with ball cartridges, and bayonets were fixed. A charge was ordered, and in the face of stones and various missiles the soldier boys cleared the streets. One man named Edward Cummings was pierced through the stomach by a bayonet thrust.

The Police Stood Like Heroes.

The wounded had been taken away to their homes and it is impossible to get names and accurate lists. The policemen stood their ground like heroes and poured a steady and galling fire into the ranks of the strikers, who numbered 2,000 or 3,000 men. Between the ranks of police and strikers Duluth's intrepid mayor, John B. Suthpin, pushed his way and the firing ceased. He told the strikers to clear the streets and go to their homes. Friday night the police received word that a number of strikers had secured firearms, but no attention was paid to the warning, the officers believing it to be a wild-cat rumor.

Ringleaders Arrested.

The following ringleaders have been arrested: Frank Lundgren, Joseph Frank, Carl Carlson, Swan Hendblom, Adolph Phick. Everything was in an unsettled state Saturday night; police and militia and scores of specials were patrolling the west end streets. All saloons were closed in that end of town.

SOME LATER DETAILS

Only One Killed, but Four Likely to Die—A Dynamite Rumor.

DULUTH, Minn., July 8.—Sunday's daylight did not lessen the hideousness of Saturday's report of the rioting, except that but one death has occurred instead of five. The other four and two additional are expected to die at any time. The wounded will greatly overrun Saturday's estimate, and it is now estimated that at least fifty people altogether received bullet wounds. Three have bayonet wounds, and about a dozen were hit by stones and bricks. The police injuries include sixteen officers, two of whom will be off duty some time. The others did not realize their hurts until returning to the Central station, when an examination revealed them.

The Strikers Steal Dynamite.

The strikers have stolen a lot of dynamite from the blasting contractors, and it is believed in the event of the expected conflict that this explosive will be brought into action. The police will watch the strikers with Winchester rifles and revolvers, and the militia will report in an instant. The regular force will all be detailed for this duty, the specials taking care of the quiet portions of the city. Prominent citizens are offering their services to the police, and if trouble comes the bluecoats, sore and wounded as they are, will be strong enough to take care of it.

TERRITORIAL CONVENTIONS.

All the Gatherings Get Their Permanent Organizations in Order.

OLYMPIA, W. T., July 6.—The convention yesterday elected Judge Hoyt, of Seattle, chairman, and John I. Booge, of Spokane Falls, secretary. Judge Hoyt is a Woman Suffragist and Prohibitionist. For these reasons a strong fight was made against him. Booge has been a lobbyist of the Northern Pacific. It is understood that his election means that nothing damaging to their interest will be placed in the constitution. The railroads have very strong lobbyists here, as they desire to secure the control of tide lands at Tacoma, Seattle and other points. A big fight will be made over this. A committee on order of business was appointed. The convention adjourned until to-day.

Fancher Presides at Bismarck.

MINNEAPOLIS, Minn., July 6.—The Journal's Bismarck, D. T., special says: The constitutional convention met at 10:45 yesterday morning. The report of the committee on credentials was read and adopted. The election of a permanent chairman was the next business. Campbell, of Stutsman, presented the name of F. B. Fancher, the Republican caucus nominee. W. E. Purcell, of Wahpeton, presented the name of John E. Carland, of Bismarck, as the Democratic nominee. Fancher was elected on the first ballot, receiving 52 votes to Carland's 17. Carland asked that the election be made unanimous. A committee on rules was appointed, and the convention adjourned.

EXAMINE BEFORE YOU BUY.

WHEN in a grocer's store you stand
And cakes of IVORY SOAP demand,
Be careful not to be misled
And imitations take instead
For dealers oft will praises sing
Of that which may more profit bring.
Let not your senses clouded be Because a showy cake you see.
For villainy is not confined
To darkest colors, bear in mind,
And oft the sham is not remote
From fairest face or whitest coat.
Examine well with careful eye
The cake until the name you spy,
And always thus be well assured
That IVORY SOAP you have procured;
And should a lingering doubt remain,
'Twill vanish like the darkest stain,
When in the tub on washing day
That cake of soap is brought in play.

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Keweenaw county's sheriff has been a person in his day, and when he gets into the pulpit is said to make as good a record hunting sinners as he does when in pursuit of a fleeing criminal—which means there's a mighty slim chance for escape.

The Grand Trunk railway is transporting 10,000 hogs daily. The eastern terminus is that land of pork and beans, Boston.

A Montmorency county bear was seized by an irresistible impulse to visit the haunts of civilization, and so waddled forth from its forest den. Before it had been on the chase many days it struck a print shop and proceeded to investigate, but this was a short-lived pleasure, for it accidentally ran against the office towel, receiving a fatal wound. Verily, this life is full of unseen dangers.

Mrs. Robert Humes, a Marquette lady, is the mother of a span of boy babies of about the same age—any way they're twins—that weighed twenty-four pounds, and all hands are prospering nicely.

Marion Dennison, a Union City sheep-shearer, has peeled the jackets from 25,000 sheep during the last haf century and is still in the ring with his shears.

A syndicate of Chicago and Escanaba capitalists have invested $800,000 in upper peninsula lands that are estimated to cut 200,000,000 feet of pine. This purchase is in addition to one recently made of 42,000,000 feet in the same latitude.

A bolt of lightning uncermoniously stripped the shoes and breeches from an Escanaba man while he was busily engaged in eating his supper. He was thoroughly surprised and quite badly burned.

Red Jacket has several churches, but not one where the way to Heaven is pointed out in the United States language.

Elk Rapids booze is very delusive stuff, as the sportsmen who drink it imagine that they haul ten-pound trout from Elk lake.

A Port Huron lady accidentally drank a glass of lye some six months ago, and after lingering along in indescribable agony, died the past week.

A Jackson man and a keg of beer disappeared at the same time several weeks since. The body of the former has been found in a local mill gond, but the latter remains undiscovered.

The new Muskegon cheminal engine factory will be turning out colonic extinguishers abong in July if all goes well.

Flint will have $709 worth of a Fourth of July celebration and—a heap o' fun for the small boy.

Muskegon did herself proud in entertaining the West Michigan Press association. But what a transformation 'twill be for the editors to exchange the sumptuous repasts of the Sawdust City for the hardtack and humdrum of their daily life.

A Berrien county man generously provided for his heirs with $5 bequests in his will, while several missionary societies were let off with $1,0000. Then the man died and was gathered unto his fathers, but his heirs are of the opinion that they're not 300 times less deserving than the heathen auxiliaries, and propose to knock that will topsy turvy.

St. Joseph and Benton Harbor boys have taken to the pastime of carrying revolvers, and the record of a two-weeks' engagement is one boy killed and two wounded.

A Bay City man has the choice of paying a $300 fine or spending ninety days at the bastile, all because he gave the justice who imposed the fine a lively cussing.

The Michigan wheelmen, who are making a tour of Europe, are having a very pleasant and judging from the accounts of the way they are being received by the authorities of the towns they visit. Nothing, in fact, seems to be too good for 'em.

There's some prospect that the legislature will adjourn—by and by—and Lansing folks are so tickled over the indications that they talk of holding a Sunday school convention. If ever the doxology was in order that'll be the time.

The most noticeable thing about the Menominee river just now is a log jam of 600,000,000 feet. She June freshet seems to have started 'em down stream, where they can make the acquaintance of the tireless circular saw.

A Battle Creek horse jockey made an equine swap and was to pay $18 "boot" money, he getting much the better roadster. Not having the cash, however, he offered an undated note payable "to-morrow." The holder of the promise to pay has since learned that "to-morrow" hasn't come yet and isn't likely to, so far as the cash is concerned.

A Moreuci inventor has devised a new style of fastener for coffin lids which will effectually prevent the occupant from opening it. Well, well, to what lofty hights will the genius of ingenuity attain.

Mrs. Mary Ann Bush is a Novi lady who was born in the land of wooden hams and steady habits, away back in 1793, and is still able to do a good day's work and smoke her pipe, she having been addicted to the latte practice for more'n sixty years.

The number of Johnstown flood sufferers seems to have been greatly under estimated, judging from the number of tourists now doing this state who offer that excuse for engaging in the tramping act.

A Port Huron citizen who bears the significant title of Lawless, has been introduced to the cooler four time within a month for over-indulgence in boozy beverages.

Salt is getting to be a humble Saginaw product, the price having dropped to 48 cents per barrel at that place the past week. The salt trust hasn't yet gone into operation.

The keepers of Cadillac houses of questionable character are traveling over rough and rugged paths of late. Some of 'em have paid fines, others have skipped to avoid the tax levy imposed by stern-eyed justice, while all seem to be imbued with the idea that the local edict, they "must go," was something more than a "mere form of words."

Professor Sears seems to have wearied of life at the state public school, his resignation having been offered the board of control. His successor hasn't yet been chosen, albeit Professor Foster still lives in Coldwater.

One Kalamazoo citizen brought suit against another K. c. for embezzment, but couldn't prove the charge, whereupon the defendant retaliated with a damage suit, obtaining a judgment for $1,000. That was a practical "turn of the tables," and no mistake.

A gentleman who's made the trip around the world for the fourth time has settled down to the editing of a local paper at Grand Rapids. Another insect pest is camping on Michigan wheat fields, known as the green midge, but what damage may result cannot be determined as yet. This is the same insect that is working destruction to the growing crop in Indiana.

Irving Latimer no longer swings a blacksmith sledge at the Jackson prison, having been promoted to run a shaping machine. Irving evidently has settled down to the idea of an extended stay at the prison, as he's had his cell carpeted with Brussels, and has ordered a permanent supply of literary magazines for his diversion.

The investment of $50 to $75 each with traveling fakirs has convinced several Flint citizens that it's not exactly profitable—for themselves—to stake too much wealth on another fellow's game.

Michigan Legislature.

LANSING, Mich., June 25.—At yesterday's session of the house effort was made to reconsider the vote by which the Chapman graded 2-cent fare bill was passed. A motion was made to table the motion, which was carried by a narrow margin and cut off all attempts at reconsideration. The governor will give the railroad men a hearing on the bill to-morrow.

LANSING, Mich., June 26.—A large delegation of East Saginaw citizens invaded the capitol yesterday morning and commenced a systematic lobbying in favor of a consolidation bill making East Saginaw and Saginaw City one. The house promptly passed the bill, and hereafter the two cities will be known as Saginaw, and will become the third city in population in the state. The house bill regulating the employment of women and children in factories was passed, and the bill increasing the taxes on railway property was killed.

LANSING, Mich., June 27.—Both houses yesterday passed the bill requiring railroads to heat their cars with heaters approved by the railway commissioners. The senate agreed to the house consolidation of the 1,000 mile ticket bill with the graded 2-cent fare bill. Last night, however, it was discovered that the bill repealed a law which authorized a railroad tunnel under the St. Clair river, and on which several hundred men are at work. The bill was therefore pulled back by the senate for amendment, and when put on its passage again failed to carry. The bill making illegal all combines except laborers and farmers has passed both houses. The house passed the bill making the retail liquor tax $500 and the wholesale tax $600. The senate passed the bill prohibiting the employment of children under 14 in factories, and the bill requiring railways to carry state troop when under military orders at 1 cent a mile.

LANSING, Mich., June 28.—Both houses have passed the bill giving a wife separate maintenance when her husband is guilty of an offense for which she could get a divorce. An attempt in the senate to pass the bill to repeal the charter of the Lake Shore was defeated, while a bill to repeal the act giving certain privileges to the Arctic Mining company, which was passed two weeks ago, was carried. The house killed it, however. The house passed a bill making sleeping car rates $1.50 for lower and $1 for upper berths.

LINSING, Mich., June 29.—The Michigan legislature, which has been in session about six months, has at last adjourned. One of the last bills passed was the general appropriation bill, amounting to $1,600,000. This, with the special appropriations, will make the state taxes for the next two years aggregate over $3,000,000, or about $200,000 less than the total for the last two years. The cost of the legislative session was $133,000. A bill to authorize cities to adopt the Raines voting machine was defeated overwhelmingly. Hereafter non-residents who want to marry in the state will have to obtain licenses in the county where they marry. Bills were passed appropriating $70,000 for the new reform school buildings; providing for minority representation in the legislature from Detroit and Grand Rapids; creating a state court to settle labor troubles, and a modification of the Australian system in the way of an election law.

AFTER A BALD-KNOBBER.

Wiley Matthews, Who Escaped from Jail, About To Be Arrested.

OZARK, Mo., July 1.—Thomas Geary, formerly of this county, but now living in Carroll county, Arkansas, arrived here Friday and gave Sheriff Johnson information which will probably result in the arrest of Wiley Mathews, the fugitive Bald-Knobber. Geary and Mathews were old friends in the Kald-knob neighborhood, and the former was greatly surprised a week ago to discover Mathews cutting ties in a pinery near Van Buren, Ark.

Will Not Be Taken Alive.

He had a talk with the fugitive, and then came to this town, informed the sheriff and put in a claim for the reward. Mathews was well armed when Geary saw him, and said he would never be taken alive. The sheriff left for Arkansas Friday night. If Mathews is captured he will surely hang, as he is considered a greater criminal than his uncle or the two Walkers who were executed. His father, a Baptist minister, resides only a short distance from where Geary saw the fugitive.

Victory for Chicago Dressed Beef.

VALPARAISA, Ind., July 1.—James B. Harvey, agent of Swift & Co., was arrested at Hammond, Ind., last week and fined $50 by a local magistrate for selling in that city dressed beef slaughtered in Chicago. He was committed to jail for failure to pay the fine. Monday he was taken before Judge William Johnston, of the Porter circuit court, on a writ of habeas corpus. Friday Judge Johnston delivered an elaborate opinion, holding the law under which Harvey was fined to be unconstitutional, and discharging the prisoner.

The Santa Fe to Withdraw.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 1.—It is announced that the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe is about to withdraw from the Inter-State Commerce association, this act being caused by the Alton's revision of its rates on cattle to the Missouri river, as announced Thursday night. The withdrawal of these two roads from the association will cause the association's demise July 10, when the Alton's new rate goes into effect.

One man took six bottles, and was cured of Rheumatism of 10 years' standing." Abraham Hare, druggist, Bellville, Ohio affirms: "The best selling medicine I have ever handled in my 20 years experience, is Electric Bitters." Thousands of others have added their testimony, so that the verdict is unanimous that Electric Bitters do cure all diseases of the Liver, Kidneys or Blood. Only a half dollar a bottle at

THE ALUMNI REUNION.

Annual Meeting of the High School Alumni on Friday Evening, June 28th, at Armory Hall.

The Annual reunion of the Alumni Association which was held this year at Armory Hall, was one of the most interesting ever held since the organization of the society. The attendance was much larger than usual and the program much better.

Shortly after eight o'clock the gathering was called to order by the President Alf. W. James.

Rev. J. S. Joslin offered prayer.

Music followed by the orchestra, which was composed of Prof. Skinner with the cornet, Mr. Louis Gray with the violin and Miss Carrie Keyser at the organ. Their selections were well chosen and very finely executed.

Prof. E. A. Wilson gave the oration, entitled "The Education of To-day," and Mrs. Jno. J. Freeman followed with a poem which was much above the average in merit.

Miss Grayson sang a solo in her usual felicitious style.

Miss Hattie McClue read an essay, entitled "Little Causes—Great Results," and the History of the class of '82 was presented by Miss Elida James.

Another selection by the orchestra followed.

The welcome to the class of '89 was given by the President Alf. W. James, and a very tasty response by the President of the class, Fred Boyd.

Supper was then duly attended to. The menu was gotten up in VanAntwerp's best style, and that is all that need be said on this point.

After ice cream and cake were disposed of, the usual "feast of reason and flow of soul" followed. During this part of the program the toastmaster of the evening Dr. Geo. Howell acted as master of ceremonies, and the following toasts were given. All of the responses received touched a sympathetic chord, and some of them were of especial merit. That of G. P. Waring was well worthy of preservation and we have the pleasure of printing it in full below.

THE REGULAR TOASTS.

"Politics—The ins and the outs—Chewing the food of sweet and bitter fancy." I found that "Every rose has its thorn,

And every sweet its sting."
—HON. G. P. WARING.

Practice.
—EUGENE TREMAIN.

The Public Schools of Michigan.
—Prof. J. R. Miller.

The younger Alumni, or the class of '89.

"The skies are finer,
The gales are fewer,
And hearts are lighter,
And life is brighter."
—LELMA STEWART.

Co. C. Mich. State Troops.

"What art shall calm the furious sons of war."
—WALTER BURRIDGE.

Is marriage a failure?

"I saw her coral lips to move
And with her breath she did perfume the air, Sacred and sweet was all I saw in her"

School ma'ams—By request.

"That bearing of her beauty and her wit,
Her affability, and bashful modesty,
Her woman's qualities, and mild behavior,
Am bold to show myself a forward guest"
—DR. L. G. NORTH.

Happy Hours in the school room.

"Good-bye, shall we say it? good-bye,
'Tis a sign but O, its a token
That the heart and glistening eye, Wouldly gladly leave unspoken."
—MAE WOODARD.

The committee appointed to make a list of officers for the coming year reported the following, which list was ratified by the meeting. Thus closed a most pleasurable reunion. All who were present enjoyed it and those who were absent missed a good thing.

Pres.—G. P. Waring.
1st. Vice Pres.—Prof. Wilson.
2d. " " —Mae F. Woodard.
Sec.—L. G. North
Treas.—Abner Wilson.
Orator—Fred Boyd.

Alt.—Francis A. Kehoe.
Historian—Ada Waldron.

Alt.—Mabel Hayden.
Toast Master—P. W. Adams.

The Ins and the Outs.

There's a game just now raging,
Known to all as base ball;
Many join in the pastime,
Both the great and the small.

In which there are men contending on sides,
All trying to win as on the game glides;
But the point in the game (as the sides take their bouts),
So important to all, is "the ins and the outs"

While the sport is in progress, one sees that its aim
Bears visible likeness to the political game
Which this nation is playing, with its parties and strife,
And bringing disgrace to our political life;
For the principle thing causing victory and shouts,
Is the skirmish which settles "the ins and the outs."

Politicians may talk of free trade and protection,
But the greatest issue of all, is how to win an election;
A count that is fair, and a ballot that's free,
Is no issue at all, as you plainly can see;
But the problem to solve, no intelligence doubts,
Is to get the most votes for 'the ins and the outs'

Each national contest proves this parallel broad,
As its won or its lost, through bribery or fraud;
Or a slip of the tongue may reverse the net gain,
As Burchard's three R's did it nicely for Blaine;
No issue is settled to save Columbia's grave doubts,
As the struggle all centers on "the ins and the outs."

Protection! Protection! Reform! Reform!
We heard it last fall—a tumultous storm;
But money, yes money, the people's good cash,
Which monopolist's handle, came down with a crash;
And principles' rights, like so many clouts,
Were displaced by the question, of "the ins and the outs."

There were "louis," there were "steals," good men were "fanned out."
Both Cleveland and Miller had reason to pout,
But Harrison and Hill received the stuff from Which whiskey and money their gains did promote,
And poor Sackville West, one of Great Britain's scouts,
Learned the political game of "the ins and the outs."

Of Reform, reform, or protection, protection,
Scarce a word has been heard since the day of election;
The people, the people, who their wrongs want redressed,
Are watching their servants while they feather their nests.
And parcel out place to the unceasing pouts,
In this political conflict for the ins and the outs.
The rest of my topic our toastmaster supplied,
"The chewing of food, sweet and bitter," he's tried,
And found that in politics, modern and new,
There's few places for men who are honest and true;
Its his sentiment sure, and I'm to tell you this thing,
"Every rose has its thorn, every sweet has its sting."

The political field contains many good men
Who are honest in speech, and loyal with pen;
And sometimes they win, a wrong they prevent,
But its oftener true, to a wrong they consent
To strengthen their party to which they most cling,
But "every rose has its thorn, every sweet has its sting."

A ballot cast freely, and counted as fair,
Is the right of all freeman in this land everywhere;
Yet good men may blush for the corruption of both,
While election inspectors dishonor their oath;
Yes, by whiskey and money many votes do they bring,
"Every rose has its thorn, every sweet has its sting.

The legion of labor is feeling oppressed,
As the rich become richer, the poor more distressed;
With land leagues and trusts owning land and production,
Politician's consent, and we go on to destruction;
We'er bidding our time," for the poet did sing,
"Every rose has its thorn "every sweet has its sting."

Then the crime of the traffic in whiskey and beer
Is a political crime, costing millions each year,
Entrenched as it is behind parties and law,
Demanding a license an purpose to draw
Our sons from the fireside, oh our hearts it doth wring.
Its a "thorn" without "roses," a curse that doth "sting."

The uncivilized cannibal, on the isles of the sea,
Devours his own offspring with inhuman glee.
But this Christian nation sins a thousand times more,
When it sells its own sons at the revenue store;
A political crime, (of the devil its born,)
Without "roses" or "sweetness" a most poisonous "thorn."

Revolution is certain, and ought to come when
A Republic pays taxes from the vices of men,
Revolution is coming, God's plans never fail,
Oh, hasten then the day when right will prevail;
When posterity receives the fabric we bring
May our laws be a blessing instead of a "sting."

But what is the matter, and what can we do,
That these wrongs be corrected, they are many, not few;
We must think less of party, and our ballots keep white,
Because ballots determine all these questions of right,
If we vote for a wrong, and expect a good thing,
We'll prove the old adage, "every sweet has its sting.

And to speed the glad day when these wrongs shall be righted,
I venture to say, have the sisters invited,
To help us undo these wrongs of their brothers;
But giving the ballot to our wives, and our mothers
But remember this couplet, and give it good swing,
"Every rose has its thorn, every sweet has its sting."

TECUMSEH COLONY IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 28th, 1889.

DEAR HERALD.—If you had happened to have been in this city last Saturday night, the 22d., you would have found in the grand parlor of the Palmer house a number of the old Tecumsehites now living in Chicago. This meeting was the result of an agitation started by one of the number over a year ago.

The sentiment of the meeting was entirely in favor of making a great effort to get up a reunion of Tecumseh people, and after a pleasant evening spent in discussing the matter, and visiting, the meeting was adjourned to Tuesday, the 25th.

On Tuesday night the pleasant home of Mrs. Wood and her daughter Irene, at 191 Schiller Street was filled by people determined that the reunion should be a success. During the evening it was decided that not only should a reunion be worked up, but that a permanent society should be organized, and "The Lenawee Club" was the result. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Pres.—Lavern F. Wheeler.
Vice Pres.—Mrs. Lillie Langdon.
Secretary—Mrs Minerva K. Elliott.
Assist. Sec.—Miss Irene Wood.
Treas.—Mrs. Alice Johnson.

After the business had been dispatched Mrs. Elliott gave the company a fine recitation. Carl Burton also favored the guests with some highly appreciated music during the evening. Another meeting will be held in Parlor 27 at the Grand Pacific Hotel, on Tuesday evening, July 9th, when it is hoped that all the eighty odd ex-Tecumsians living in this city will come together and make the club a grand success.

It was proposed at the last meeting that a picnic and jollification should be held in Jackson Park during the coming exposition, so that all Tecumseh, or Lenawee County people intending to visit the exposition could come in time to take a part in the reunion. The idea was favorably received and will be discussed again at the next meeting.

Yours Truly,
OLD HILARITY.

THE SEASIDE SPECIAL.

Ten Thousand People Inspect the Grand Trunk's Seaside Special Train.

Nearly 10,000 persons yesterday inspected $150,000 worth of magnificent rolling stock. The new "Seaside and White Mountains special" on the Chicago and Grand Trunk Road was on exhibition from 3 until 9 o'clock yesterday afternoon at the Dearborn station. It was at first remarkable to see so many people of all classes inspecting a railroad train, but after the object in view was fully realized, the wonder was that more people did not turn out to view the latest triumph of the Pullman Company.

The train was composed of six palatial cars, somewhat larger than usual and much more magnificent than is customary in this land of palatial trains. The cars are as rich in color on the outside as they are luxurious within. They look inviting commodious, and comfortable and their appearance does not belie the facts. The first car next to the engine is used for baggage and the storing and arrangement of the electricity with which the train is lighted. The train is vestibuled so that it is easy to step to the dining car called the Casa Monica, with accomodations for forty persons. There are three distinctly sleeping cars, the India the Australia, and the New Zealand. The last car is half sleeping car and half observation car, a perfect parlor All the cars are lavishly decorated, the seats being of rare flowered velvet, the designs being different in each car. The cars are light and well ventilated, containing every modern appliance for safety and comfort. There are drawing rooms in light colors, with every convenience. There is also a library in one of the cars, with a bath room and barber shop for gentlemen, while another car has a bath room for ladies. The sides of the observation car have bay windows reaching from the floor to the roof.

Perhaps one of the most interesting features of this train service to the ladies will be found a "lady attendant" or, more properly speaking, a matronly superintendant of this palace hotel on wheels, who accompanies this train and will proves needful help to ladies and especially to those traveling with children.

Commencing to day and continuing each succeeding Wednesday thereafter during the tourist season, this magnificent train will leave Chicago at 5 P. M., running through solid without change of any car to the White Mountains, Portland, Me. and the summer resorts on the coast of Maine, by way of Niagara Falls, Thousand Islands and the rapids of the St. Lawrence River. Returning, leave Portland 5 P. M. Sundays, commencing with June 30, reaching Chicago the following Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock.—Chicago "Inter Ocean."

Niagara Falls.

In the summer of 1888, Mr. Charles Graham, of New York, one of the finest aquarelists in the country, produced a water-color of Niagara Falls, remarkable in its accuracy of drawing, in its marvelous coloring, in its masterly handling of tones and effects, all of which have been perfectly reproduced. As the point of view of this picture is near the Michigan Central's station at Falls View, and represents its vestibuled limited train at that point in the fore-ground, it obtained possession of the water-color and the copies made therefrom. The latter are printed in color, 15½ by 22 inches, upon paper 22½ by 28 inches in size, and when framed cannot be distinguished from a genuine water-color save by an expert.

They far no advertising, save what is involved in the title, "MICHIGAN CENTRAL TRAIN PASSING NIAGARA FALLS." A limited number of them will be furnished to the public at Fifty Cents each, which is very much below their commercial or their artistic value. They will be securely sent by mail upon a paste-board roll, without extra charge, but not more than two copies will be sent to any one address.

Address, with postal note or postal money order for the amount, O. W. RUGGLES, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent, Chicago, Ill.

STRANGE RESURRECTION

OF ANCIENT MOUND BUILDERS AND INDIAN WARRIORS

Exhumed in Digging the Foundations for the International Exposition Buildings in Detroit—Curious and Interesting Facts About Prehistoric Races and Their Works.

In making excavations for the foundations for the buildings for the great Detroit International Exposition, the workmen, a few days ago, unearthed a large number of skeletons. There were nearly 100 skulls and skeletons exhumed, with specimens of pottery, fragments of arms of stone and metal, and other relics. These skeletons seem to have been deposited together in a pit, and then covered with earth. As the place is known to have been used for burial places by the Indians for many generations, it is more than probable that there are hundreds more of like remains in the vicinity. There is a grim fitness in the fact that so great an enterprise as the International Exposition causes an upheaval among the oldest inhabitants, alike among the living and the dead, as it to anything they ever knew or dreamed of. This find may make a valuable and interesting collection, with additions from other sources, to an archæological exhibit of Indian and prehistoric relics and antiquities at the Exposition.

Michigan is rich in traces of the ancient Mound Builders—a race that preceded by unknown centuries of time the Indians found here upon the advent of the white man. That prehistoric race worked the copper mines of the upper peninsula, wove cloth, manufactured pottery, made weapons of copper, carried on a wide commerce, and constructed earthwork fortifications and burial and other mounds.

A HUGE BURIAL MOUND

700 to 800 feet long, 300 to 400 feet wide and forty to fifty feet high was a conspicuous object near the site now occupied by the Exposition building. Most of the vast tumulus has disappeared before the plow and spade. It contained thousands upon thousands of skeletons that had been buried in heaps. For generations it was the practice of the Indians of Michigan and parts of Canada to bring many canoe loads of skeletons, at stated periods, to this great mound, and inter them together in shallow pits that were afterward covered with earth. Besides there were many single burials of chiefs and noted warriors.

This mound was originally constructed by a race preceding the Indians, traces of whose remains have been found in great abundance at a greater depth than the Indian relics. There is no doubt that the earlier occupants of the great mound burned the bones of their dead in heaps and perhaps the flesh also, thus constituting the

FIRST DETROIT CREMATION.

There were various other mounds and relics near by. Not far above, on the banks of the Detroit river, was a group of mounds, from which many bones and relics have been taken, including arrow and spear heads of stone, copper needles and other implements, pottery, shells, beads, etc. In 1870 fourteen bodies were disinterred near Fort Wayne, with an earthen crock at the head of each. In excavating the foundations for the Twenty-fourth street police station a number of skulls and parts of skeletons were uncovered. Below Fort Wayne was formerly an oval embankment or of low earthworks, inclosing about an acre and a half of land. It had a ditch, eight feet wide, partly outside and partly inside its low walls, and a gateway fifty feet wide on the river front. There was a marsh all around, except a narrow neck connecting with the higher land. This neck showed traces of being protected by parallel embankments.

The remains found in the Detroit mounds are of singular value. They show skulls of the lower strata, that, even to the uneducated eye, appear to belong to different races. Some of the remains show a race of stature much below that of the average Indian, and skulls with such low and receding fronts as indicate an intelligence but little above brutes, belonging to the lowest order of savagery. Among the most curious remains are so-called because each one has a hole cut in it of an inch and a half to two inches in diameter, evidently by some sharp stone or metal tool. But the piece of bone thus cut out was carefully replaced before burial. Conjecture is at a loss to account for this.

It may have been to remove the brain; or it may have been to open a door for the spirit to leave the body, as the Indians were advanced enough in civilization to know that the brain was the seat of knowledge, or the residence of the spirit, and these perforated skulls are comparatively modern and Indian, although prior to the advent of the whites. The Detroit mounds also raise the important question whether the Indians, or their prehistoric predecessors, were acquainted with iron, some traces that seem to indicate where iron has disappeared being found in the mounds. It is said that traces of iron have not been discovered in the known to be ancient graves of the mounds in any other state.

ALL OVER THE STATE

are curious traces of a vanished race. Burial mounds are found in many places, the most notable being near Grand Rapids and Detroit. There was formerly a stone mound on the island of Mackinac. Earthwork fortifications, enclosing springs or supplied with water by ditches, existed on the Clinton river in Macomb county, with burial mounds near it; upon a small lake in Gilead, Branch county; near Prairie Ronde; near Marshall; several on the Kalamazoo river; a very large work near Three Rivers, St. Joseph county; on Climax prairie, and in other places. Some of these prehistoric forts were square; some a line of breastworks across a point of land; but most were circular or oval. Perhaps the most curious of all the remains of a prehistoric people are the

found in the counties of St. Joseph, Cass, and Kalamazoo; at Three Rivers, Schoolcraft, Kalamazoo, Prairie Ronde, Galesburg, Gilead, etc. In these places the ground was regularly platted into what seemed to be raised garden beds of regular forms, with sunken walks between, and the earth showing supposed evidences of having been at some time in the remote past annually cultivated. These garden beds covered large spaces—300 acres in one instance—and were not the work of Indians, who did not have even a tradition to account for them, and who were not an agricultural people.

Perhaps the prehistoric race who created these strange garden beds may have had, in their long-forgotten age, their great International Fair and Exposition. Who knows?

June 12 and 13, the 15th. annual meeting of the State Pioneer and Historical Society was held at Lansing. The enrollment numbers over seven hundred, some of the most eminent ladies and gentlemen of accomplished literary attainments are members of the historical class. There are yearly printed 5,000 volumes of 700 pages, each of pioneer collections of Michigan. Every county is represented. Any person may become a member who is not less than forty years of age and a resident of the State 25 years, by paying one dollar. Each county reports annually, as near as can be ascertained, the names, age and residence of the pioneers that have died during the year. The record of Lenawee county shows that from June 1st, 1888 until June 1st., 1889, there has left us for the silent tomb, 141 pioneers, the youngest 52 years, the oldest 110, the average age of all being a trifle over 80 years. It shows a healthy record of valuable time in Michigan.

Lenawee county jail, just at present, contains about as hard a set of criminals as ever graced the bars. Two would be rapists, one murderer (who by the way may not be one), one bawdy house keeper, several petty thieves, and last but not least, a $600 safe tapper. And this is not all. Sheriff Baldwin has his eye on one or two thieves in the eastern part of the city, and a gang who are working the western part of Lenawee. There has been a remarkably large percentage of criminals brought to a successful conviction during Sheriff Baldwin's administration, and we congratulate him upon it.—Adrian Times.

Monday evening, July 8th was the 20th anniversary, of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Chas. H Beneway and it was duly celebrated in an appropriate manner. Their home was filled with a pleasant company of friends, including the mother and sister of Mrs. Benaway, Mrs. Densmore and Mrs. Smith of Dundee and others from abroad, and many from our own town. The large front lawn was given up to amusements for the younger folks, and refreshments were served there about 8 o'clock. The Tecumseh woman's relief corps gave Mrs. Beneway, who is a member, a pleasant surprise by coming in a body and extending their best wishes. Many valuable presents were received by the couple. These are the oasis in the journey of life. They come as a foretaste of Heaven where anniversaries of love forever come.

The heated term is upon us.

Thomas Walters and wife, of Perrysburg, O., were visiting their brother in Tecumseh last week. Perrysburg is the oldest town in that section of Ohio. We are indebted to Mr. Walters for a descriptive and historical pamphlet of Fort Meigs.

"The Land of the Midnight Sun" must indeed be an interesting portion of the earth's surface to visit if we may judge from the extremely interesting and beautifully illustrated article about that region that appears in Demorest's Monthly Magazine for July.

A. W. Slayton came home from Detroit to spend the 4th. He reports business good, having sold one firm 500,000 ft of basswood lumber for immediate delivery. Wonder if Gus intends to handle this lumber himself. He likes to do such things by proxy.

The farm statistics of 928 townships collected by the supervisors, have been received. The number of sheep sheared in these townships in 1888 was 1,682,260; pounds of wool, 10 207,791; average per head, 6 and 6 hundredths pounds. This number of sheep six months old and over in the same townships in May of the present year was 1,580 328. This is a decrease of 101,932, or 6 per cent. of the number sheared last year. The clip of the state this year will amount to about 11,360,000.

We clip the following from a recent number of the Jackson Patriot:

Col. Hugh Richard has just returned from a trip in northern New York, where he has been looking over the lumber interests of that section. The outlook seemed so favorable that he purchased a block of 20 000 acres adjoining the tract of Hood, Gale & Co., who have been engaged for some time in lumbering operations there. Col. Richard's purchase is timbered with birch, maple, cherry and white ash. It is well watered by numerous streams and when the timber is taken off will make, it is stated, excellent grazing land.

A GENEROUS OFFER.—The celebrated Dr. Gleason, after a practice of forty years, having during all that time made the cure of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption his special study, has in this time so perfected his treatment as to be able to cure nearly all who suffer from these complaints. Having reached the age of seventy years, he realizes that the time is near at hand when these valuable remedies must be in other hands or become lost to the world. Desiring that his Home Treatment should be within the reach of all, he has placed the prescriptions with the Hall Chemical Company; this company, knowing the wonderful success of the Home Treatment in the cure of all Throat and Lung Troubles, have decided to send the full treatment ON TRIAL, to any one who wishes to try it. Dr. Gleason has also written a valuable treatise on these diseases, which is profusely illustrated with finely executed wood-cuts, showing the Head, Throat and Lungs as they are when diseased; it discusses in an able manner the cause and cure of these complaints; it is printed on heavy super-calendered paper and handsomely bound. This book, together with full instructions how to order on trial, will be sent free to all who will write and ask for it. Address

People in a Rail Wreck Roasted by Inches.

THIRTY SOULS SENT TO ETERNITY.

Every Car in a Train Piles Into a Culvert Twenty-Five Feet Deep—Fire Breaks Out and Slowly Cremates the Shrieking Victims—Twelve Dead Bodies Recovered and Fifteen or Twenty More Probably in the Debris—A Long List of Wounded People—Other Disastrous Occurrences.

LYNCHBURG, Va., July 3.—About 2 o'clock yesterday morning an east-bound passenger train on the Norfolk and Western ran into a land-slide near Thaxton's, a station about twenty-five miles west of Lynchburg, with horrible results. The entire train, from engine to sleeping-car, went into the excavation, and the wreck taking fire from a gasoline lamp was completely consumed. It is impossible to give an exact list of the killed and wounded on account of the meagerness of the information obtainable. There is only one wire in use between Roanoke and the scene of the accident, and it is next to impossible to get anything over it but railway business.

Names of the Known Dead.

The names of the killed as far as positively ascertained are: Patrick Donovan, Lynchburg, Va.; Charles Bruce, Roanoke, Va., fireman; L. B. Summers, Abingdon, Va., mail agent; A. S. Francis, Marion, Va., mail agent; Nathal Cohen, Roanoke, Va., merchant, en route to Germany to visit his parents; W. C. Stead, Cleveland, Tenn., en route to England; J. W. Beal, Cleveland, Tenn., en route to Paris; A. M. James, Roanoke, Va., traveling engineman of the road; J. W. Linsay, Roanoke, Va., train dispatcher; John Kirkpatrick, Lynchburg, Va.; Dennis Mellon, Roanoke, janitor of the general offices of the Norfolk and Western railroad company, was en route to New York to be married; a little niece of Mrs. Judge Thompson, of Staunton, Va.

It is believed that fifteen or twenty others perished, as there were nearly seventy persons on the train, and between fifteen and twenty are unaccounted for. The dead were horribly cremated.

List of the Injured.

The injured are: Bishop Alpheus W. Wilson, of Baltimore, wrist cut and body slightly bruised; J. F. Temple, Pottsville, Pa., head and limbs burned; F. T. Dexter, Beverly, Mass., severely bruised on the head and body; J. B. Young, Radford, Va., arm mashed; Mrs. Judge Thompson, Staunton, Va., bruised, and deranged with grief over the death of her little niece; Roland Johnson, Roanoke, Va., conductor, frightfully cut on the head and face; E. C. Dubarry, superintendent, bruised severely; W. C. Glass, Roanoke, baggage agent, arm broken; W. H. Hayward, Pullman conductor, shoulder hurt; J. D. Tanner, Lynchburg, Va., badly bruised; Joseph Goldberg, New York city, leg and shoulder bruised and hand hurt; Miss Inez Jackson, Texas, bruised; R. B. Goodfellow, Roanoke, hand and foot injured; J. C. Cassell, Roanoke, superintendent, arm hurt; H. W. Marsin, Chattanooga, Tenn., cut and bruised; M. D. Temple, Chicago, back injured; Mrs. R. B. Young, Marshall, Tex., body bruised.

On the body of Mr. W. C. Stead, of Cleveland, Tenn., was found the sum of $14,000. He was on his summer vacation, and was going to England.

A Plunge Into a Chasm.

LATER.—It is now known that the cause of the wreck was the washing out of a culvert, due to the heavy rains of the past few days. The train was passing over the culvert when the track gave way and the whole train went through to the bottom, twenty-five feet below. All of the cars, five in number, with the engine, were piled up in a hopelessly confused mass. The darkness which reigned over all for a moment was quickly dispelled as the woodwork of the cars was ignited by the flames from the lamps.

Dreadful Deaths of the Doomed.

It was only a few minutes after that the wreck was all ablaze, and to the horror of bruised and broken limbs and mangled bodies was added the certainty of a fearful death by fire. Many had gone to their death quickly, but the shrieks and groans of the wounded, pinned down by the heavy timbers and by rods of twisted iron, as the flames slowly crept toward them and began their awful work, made the scene one of intense horror. Those who were able to crawl from the wreck lent their aid by the light of the flaming timber to their less fortunate companions.

The Living Entirely Helpless.

But little could be done for them. There were no tools on hand with which to cut the timbers that held them down, and they lay there helpless and were roasted in full sight of those who had been fortunate enough to escape. Thus far the charred remains of seven or eight human beings have been taken from the wreck. They are badly mutilated, and it is impossible in any way to identify them. Their names will not be known, unless a census of the occupants of the cars can be obtained. It is believed that fully thirty people have been killed.

THE DISASTER AT THAXTON'S.

Seventeen Persons is the Total of Killed—A Ghastly Inventory.

ROANOKE, Va., July 8.—Two coffins filled with the charred remains of seven victims of the railroad disaster at Thaxton's have been buried here. There were six spinal columns and one heart in the collection. The heart was that of a little child of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Peyton, of Radford, and was all that could be found of her remains. It is now known that seventeen persons were killed. John J. Stevenson, of Richmond, is now included with the lost, as he was to have returned home on the ill-fated train, and no trace of him can be discovered. Mail Agent Bruce was not killed, as reported, nor were any of the express messengers on the train. Hopkins, reported as killed in the express car, is not in the service of the company. All of the wounded brought to this city have been sent to their homes. Only three bodies were identified, and not the slightest trace of Road Engineer James, Fireman Bruce, Janitor Mallon, Train Despatcher Lifsey, or Nathan Cohen, of this city, has been discovered.

ROLLED DOWN AN EMBANKMENT.

A Passenger Train in Georgia Wrecked—Six Persons Hurt.

COLUMBUS, Ga., July 4.—A passenger train on the Southwestern road was wrecked three miles west of Geneva Wednesday morning. The train was composed of a sleeper, a passenger, express, and baggage car. The engine left the track and the two former cars rolled down an embankment. The following is a list of the injured: W. Mitchell, of Talbotton, injured internally; J. L. Black, of New York, badly hurt about the head; J. H. Palmer, chief of police of Columbus, hurt in the back, head, and breast; Miss Reid, of Macon, seriously injured internally; Mr. Nicholson, of New York, face badly skinned and disfigured; Mr. Chandler, of Savannah, slight bruises. The wounded passengers, with the exception of Miss Reid, were brought to this city on a relief train.

A GREAT BREWERY IN RUINS.

The Big Establishment of Falk, Jung & Borchert, Milwaukee, Destroyed.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., July 3.—The Falk, Jung & Borchert Brewing company plant, located on South Pierce street, between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth avenues, was totally destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. Not a building of the great plant was spared. The fire originated in the malt house and spread with great rapidity, destroying the malt house, the brew house, the offices, the bottling department, and finally spreading to the beer cellars, which at 9 p. m. were still burning.

An Estimate of the Loss.

The total loss is estimated at from $700,000 to $800,000, and the insurance reaches only half of this sum. The beer cellars contained 52,000 barrels of the amber fluid, and the bottling department was stocked with 6,000 barrels more, ready for shipment to the south. As the brewery is located at the city limits it was very difficult for the fire department to do effective work, and two hours after the fire had started the great plant was a mass of ruins. The cause of the fire is unknown, but it is supposed to have been overheating of the malt house.

Facts About the Plant.

The capacity of the brewery was 600,000 barrels of beer per year, and 300 men were employed in the establishment. The company was a consolidation of the former, Falk Brewing company and the Jung & Borchert Brewing company, which were merged into one, with a capital of $1,000,000. Very expensive improvements in the shape of additional machinery to the old Falk Brewing company had just been completed, amounting to $100,00, and a new refrigerator, which alone cost $50,000, had just been put into place. All of this was destroyed by the fire. Sixteen large tanks of ammonia used in connection with the refrigerator exploded and helped to spread the fire to the adjoining buildings. No one was seriously injured by the fire. The brewery will be rebuilt immediately.

THE FISHING CLUB CULPABLE.

Verdict of the Jury Which Investigated the Conemaugh Valley Deluge.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., July 8.—Coroner Evans and his jury finished their work Saturday night at 9 o'clock, and in a hour rendered a verdict to the effect that from "the testimony [as to] South Fork dam] and what we saw on the ground there was not sufficient waste-weirs nor was the dam constructed strong enough, nor the proper material used to withstand the overflow; and hence we find that the owners of said dam were culpable in not making it as secure as it should have been, especially in view of the fact that a population of many thousands were in the valley below; and we hold that the owners are responsible for the fearful loss of life and property resulting from the breaking of the dam."

The verdict was a surprise to every one, but appears to give general satisfaction to the residents of this place. The jury held six sessions, and carefully examined a dozen witnesses.

You should read THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS because you have the time to read it. There is a paper published in Australia which is as large as a blanket. This wouldn't suit you. You want a newspaper at once convenient, complete and condensed, and still you don't want to overlook anything of real importance. You don't want your neighbor to say to you, "Did you read so-and-so in to-day's paper? and be obliged to answer, "No, I didn't see that," and then have him ask you, "What paper do you read?" This will never happen to you if you read THE CHICAGO DAILY NEWS.

The Great War Syndicate.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON.

Author of "Rudder Grange," "Amos Kilbright," "The Bee Man of Orn," "The Christmas Wreck," "The Lady or the Tiger," "The Late Mrs. Null," "The Hundredth Man," "The Casting Away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine," "The Dusantes," etc.

At precisely 10 o'clock, up rose from Repeller No. 11 two tall jets of black smoke. Up rose from the promontory of Caerdaff, a heavy gray cloud, like an immense balloon, and then the people on the hill tops and highlands felt a sharp shock of the ground and rocks beneath them, and heard the sound of a terrible but momentary grinding crush.

As the cloud began to settle, it was borne out to sea by the wind, and then it was revealed that the fortifications of Caerdaff had disappeared.

In ten minutes there was another smoke signal, and a great cloud over the castellated structure on the other side of the bay. The cloud passed away, leaving a vacant space on the other side of the bay.

The second shock sent a panic through the crowd of spectators. The next earthquake bomb might strike among them. Down the eastern slopes ran hundreds of them, leaving only a few of the bravest civilians, the reporters of the press, and the naval and military men.

The next motor bomb descended into the fishing village, the comminuted particles of which, being mostly of light material, floated far out to sea.

The detachment of artillerists who had been deputed to man the guns on the heights which commanded the bay, had been ordered to fall back to the mountains as soon as it had been seen that it was not the intention of the repeller to send boats on shore. The most courageous of the spectators trembled a little when the fourth bomb was discharged, for it came farther inland, and struck the height on which the battery had been placed, removing all vestiges of the guns, caissons, and the ledge of rock on which they had stood.

THE STAMPEDE CAUSED BY THE MOTOR BOMBS.

The motor bombs which the repeller was now discharging were of the largest size and greatest power, and a dozen more of them were discharged at intervals of a few minutes. The promontory on which the fortifications had stood was annihilated, and the waters of the bay swept over its foundations. Soon afterward the head of the bay seemed madly rushing out to sea, but quickly surged back to fill the chasm which yawned at the spot where the village had been.

The dense clouds were now upheaved at such short intervals that the scene of devastation was completely shut out from the observers on the hills, but every few minutes they felt a sickening shock, and heard a momentary and horrible crash and hiss which seemed to fill all the air. The instantaneous motor bombs were tearing up the seaboard, and grinding it to atoms.

It was not yet noon when the bombardment ceased. No more puffs of black smoke came up from the distant repeller, and the vast spreading mass of clouds moved seaward, dropping down upon St. George's channel in a rain of stone dust. Then the repeller steamed shoreward, and when she was within three or four miles of the coast she ran up a large white flag in token that her task was ended.

This sign that the bombardment had ceased was accepted in good faith, and as some of the military and naval men had carefully noted that each puff from the repeller was accompanied by a shock, it was considered certain that all the bombs which had been discharged had acted, and that, consequently, no further danger was to be apprehended from them. In spite of this announcement many of the spectators would not leave their position on the hills, but a hundred or more of curious and courageous men ventured down into the plain.

That part of the sea coast where Caerdaff had been was a new country, about which men wandered slowly and cautiously with sudden exclamations of amazement and awe. There were no longer promontories jutting out into the sea; there were no hillocks and rocky terraces rising inland. In a vast plain, shaven and shorn down to a common level of scarred and pallid rock, there lay an immense chasm two miles and a half long, half a mile wide, and so deep that shuddering men could stand and look down upon the rent and riven rocks upon which had rested that portion of the Welsh coast which had now blown out to sea.

An officer of the Royal engineers stood on the seaward edge of this yawning abyss; then he walked over to the almost circular body of water which occupied the place where the fishing village had been, and into which the waters of the bay had flowed. When this officer returned to London he wrote a report to the effect that a ship canal, less than an eighth of a mile long, leading from the newly formed lake at the head of the bay, would make of this chasm, when filled by the sea, the finest and most thoroughly protected island basin for ships of all sizes on the British coast. But before this report received due official consideration the idea had been suggested and elaborated in a dozen newspapers.

Accounts and reports of all kinds describing the destruction of Caerdaff, and of the place in which it had stood, filled the newspapers of the world. Photographs and pictures of Caerdaff as it had been and as it then was were produced with marvelous rapidity, and the earthquake bomb of the American war syndicate was the subject of excited conversation in every civilized country.

CAERDAFF AFTER THE BOMBARDMENT.

The British ministry was now the calmest body of men in Europe. The great opposition storm had died away; the great war storm had ceased, and the wisest British statesmen saw the unmistakable path of national policy lying plain and open before them. There was no longer time for arguments and struggles with opponents or enemies, internal or external. There was even no longer time for the discussion of measures. It was the time for the adoption of a measure which indicated itself, and which did not need discussion.

On the afternoon of the day of the bombardment of Caerdaff, Repeller No. 11, accompanied by her crabs, steamed for the English channel. Two days afterward there lay off the coast at Brighton, with a white flag floating high above her, the old Tallapoosa, now naval mistress of the world.

Near by lay a cable boat, and constant communication by way of France was kept up between the officers of the American syndicate and the repeller. In a very short time communications were opened between the repeller and London.

When this last step became known to the public of America, almost as much excited by the recent events as the public of England, a great disturbance arose in certain political circles. It was argued that the syndicate had no right to negotiate in any way with the government of England; that it had been empowered to carry on a war, and that if its duties in this regard had been satisfactorily executed, it must now retire and allow the United States government to attend to its foreign relations.

But the syndicate was firm. It had contracted to bring the war to a satisfactory conclusion. When it considered that this had been done, it would retire and allow the American government, with whom the contract had been made, to decide whether or not it had been properly performed.

The unmistakable path of national policy which had shown itself to the wisest British statesmen appeared broader and plainer when the overtures of the American war syndicate had been received by the British government. The ministry now perceived that the syndicate had not waged war; it had been simply exhibiting the uselessness of war as at present waged. Who now could deny that it would be folly to oppose the resources of ordinary warfare to those of what might be called prohibitive warfare?

Another idea arose in the minds of the wisest British statesmen. If prohibitive warfare were a good thing for America, it would be an equally good thing for England. More than that, it would be a better thing if only these two countries possessed the power of waging prohibitive warfare.

In three days a convention of peace was concluded between Great Britain and the American syndicate acting for the United States, its provisions being made subject to such future treaties and alliances as the governments of the two nations might make with each other. In six days after the affair at Caerdaff a committee of the American war syndicate was in London, making arrangements under the favorable auspices of the British government for the formation of an Anglo-American syndicate of war.

The Atlantic ocean now sprang into new life. It seemed impossible to imagine whence had come the multitude of vessels which now steamed and sailed upon its surface. Among these, going westward, were six crabs, and the spring armored vessel, once the Tallapoosa, going home to a triumphant reception, such as had never before been accorded to any vessel, whether of war or peace.

The blockade of the Canadian port, which had been effectively maintained without incident, was now raised, and the syndicate's vessels proceeded to an American port.

The British ironclad Adamant at the conclusion of peace was still in tow of Crab C, and off the coast of Florida. A vessel was sent down the coast by the syndicate to notify Crab C of what had occurred, and to order it to tow the Adamant to the Bermudas, and there deliver her to the British authorities. The vessel sent by the syndicate, which was a fast coast steamer, had scarcely hove in sight of the objects of her search when she was saluted by a ten inch shell from the Adamant, followed almost immediately by two others. The commander of the Adamant had no idea that the war was at an end, and had never failed, during his involuntary cruise, to fire at anything which bore the American flag, or looked like an American craft.

Fortunately the coast steamer was not struck, and at the top of her speed retired to a greater distance, whence the syndicate officer on board communicated with the crab by smoke signals.

During the time in which Crab C had had charge of the Adamant no communication had taken place between the two vessels. Whenever an air pipe had been elevated for the purpose of using therein a speaking tube, a volley from a machine gun on the Adamant was poured upon it, and after several pipes had been shot away the director of the crab ceased his efforts to confer with those on the ironclad. It had been necessary to place the outlets of the ventilating apparatus of the crab under the forward ends of some of the upper roof plates.

When Crab C had received her orders she put about the prow of the great war ship, and proceeded to tow her northeastward, the commander of the Adamant taking a parting crack with his heaviest stern gun at the vessel which had brought the order for his release.

All the way from the American coast to the Bermuda islands, the great Adamant blazed, thundered and roared, not only because her commander saw, or fancied he saw, an American vessel, but to notify all crabs, repellers and any other vile invention of the enemy that may have been recently put forth to blemish the sacred surface of the sea, that the Adamant still floated, with the heaviest coat of mail and the finest and most complete armament in the world, ready to sink anything hostile which came near enough—but not too near.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we recive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

WRITING MACHINE CABINET and OFFICE DESK

For Remington, Hammond, and Crandall Type Writer.

The advantages of this Type-writer and Office Desk over all other so-called Combination Cabinets, are:

First.—The ease and simplicity with which the desk is changed from a Library or Office Desk to a Type-writer Table. This change is effected by pushing the lid covering the machine back in the rear of cabinet—it being a roller top—removing it entirely from sight, thus overcoming the objectionable board and sounder in front of the operator. The movable top is perfectly flat, is baize covered, and forms a complete writing desk when the machine is not in use. The table on which the machine rests is so evenly balanced by our patent adjustments that it needs but a slight touch to bring the machine in position.

Second.—The advantages of the swinging table are: The table is so balanced near its center on patent maleable iron arms, that when the machine brought in place for use, it does not depend on ropes or hangers at rear of platform for support, but is held rigidly in place by its own weight, making it impossible for the machine to be tumbled down an incline in back of desk by the breaking of a rear support. The machine rests on patent slides which keeps the machine in place, and can be drawn out beyond the desk, well under the operator's hand.

Third.—The construction of the lid closing machine space makes it air tight, and the table having felt around its boarders thoroughly protects the machine from dust.

Fourth.—The foot rest and the construction of the table adjustments makes the desk as ridged as though the top was one solid board, which is a matter of great importance where a solid type-writing table is required. No operator can do good work on a shaky table.

Lastly.—The cabinet is a splendid piece of cabinet work. We manufacture them in Walnut, Antique Oak, Natural Oak, Natural Cherry, Cherry imitation, Mahogany and Ash.

Agents wanted to sell these cabinets, and where we have no agencies established we will sell direct from our works at wholesale prices.

LET THE EAGLE SCREAM.

BRITTON HAS A GRAND CELEBRATION ON THE GLORIOUS FOURTH.

A Big Crowd in Attendance—A Fine Program Presented—Incidents of the Day as Gathered by a Herald Reporter.

Last Thursday was a gala day for Britton. The eagle was let loose at sunrise, and from that time until midnight the bustling, busling little village was a scene of jollification.—The committees who had charge of the arrangements were bound that the affair should be a success, and their most saguine expectations were fully realized. From noon until sundown Britton was not only full of people but was slopping over the edges.

The day was ushered in with a national salute at sunrise. At an early hour teams began to pour into town from all points of the compass, and the early trains on both roads brought a large complement of visitors. We went down on the Mackinaw at 10 A. M. and succeeded with some difficulty in finding standing room in a freight car. Upon our arrival we found that a big crowd had already gathered and the Britton band in full uniform was parading the main street. The band soon took up the march to the open field south of the village, where the literary exercises of the day were held. A large platform with suitable covering had been erected upon which were seats for the officers and orator of the day, the choir and the bands.

A large audience quickly gathered about the stand and the president of the day, Dr. E. E. Hendershott, called the assemblage to order.

The first selection on the program was an overture by the Britton band, which was finely played.

The choir then sang "Red, White and Blue" in a very effective manner. Below are the members of the choir. Their vocal music was well chosen and finely rendered.

Geo. Gripton, leader.
LaVerne Griptou.
Chas. Smith.
Mrs. C. B. Exelby, organist
Mrs. Jas. Haight,
Mrs. Chas. Smith,
Miss Carrie Britton,
" Libbie Underwood,
" Vie Underwood,
" Emma House,
" Martha Ackley,
" Mary Bowerman,
" Carrie Dennison,
" Gertie Kniffin.

Rev. Geo. Wright offered a prayer.

The choir sang The Star Spangled Banner.

Mrs. Emma Bowerman then recited the Declaration of Independence in a very effective manner.

The choir then followed with "America," in which the entire audience joined, making the welkin ring.

H. C. Smith Esq., of Adrian, was then introduced and delivered a fine oration. The subject matter was good and he delivered it in a very impressive manner. He spoke substantially as follows:—

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen, my Fellow Citizens: As we contemplate the past we may well wonder if the revolutionary fathers, in their fondest anticipations, conceived of the sublime grandeur of these times. We can, in imagination, see their startled look could they be brought face to face with all the light and progress of to-day. Certain it is the Colonists did not dream of independence once. They only sought to soften the heart of their tyrant master, George the III, by the grace of God King of England. By the light of bivouac fires, the weary soldiers read the word of noble writers, words sharper than their swords, a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, and consecrated themselves anew to freedom's cause, saying: If there must be, let it be in our day that our children may have peace. Adams, Jefferson, Henry, Hamilton and Payne wrote and spoke; Lexington and Concord bore fruit.

The noble man of the past kept alive the flame of freedom at their hearthstones, and dying bequeathed to us the same sacred duty. We inherited the promise that not a star of the old flag should ever be dimmed. We kept the faith; we went through a baptism of fire, and came forth from the flame without the smell of smoke on our garments; we came forth purified, cemented, a nation one and indivisible, now and forever. And to the farmer's sidier, volunteer is due his meed of praise. We saw him for one moment with his wife in tremulous and loving embrac; we saw him kiss his children; we saw him shoulder his musket; saying; here I am, ready to die that my country may live. We saw him in the heat of the battle where shot and shell fell thick and fast. And we saw that he came not away until the old flag floated in triumph above the ramparts of rebellion, not a star dimmed, not a stripe faded. And to day the United States government unfolds that old flag to kiss the breeze of heaven, with, forty-two bright stars upon it.

At last justice is done: Dakotas, Washington and Wyoming. Let us rejoice and be glad. It was predicted that this day, in all the future, should be celebrated with bands of music, booming cannon, songs and merry making; that upon the lips of orators words would bud—and blossoms that we should gather together as one people, no party, no creed, no school, no north, no south, no Britton, no Ridgeway. 'Tis well. We unyoke the ox, unharness the horse the plow is laid aside, the scythe is hung in the old tree where it hangs most gracefully, the kitchen is left to care for itself. You forget that I am a democrat, and I forget that you are not, while each remembers that the other is a man, consecrated to freedom's cause. Let bygones be by-gones, let the dead past bury its dead, contemplate the living present, the perpetual star of hope. You have heard it read from the Declaration of Independence here to-day that "We hold these truths to be self evident: That all men are created equal." This was the issue with King George; we ascerted it, he denied it; he had the history of the past, we had right and reason and the hope of the future. His kingdom was of lords and ladies, dukes and earls, all to the manor born; once a peasant always a peasant, said he; no man shall be held accountable for the conditions of his birth said we. We fought the fight, we won the day, and now it matters not; we may have been rocked in the cradle of adversity, we have knelt by the bedside of want. You may wear the glorious robes of honest poverty, it matters not, this nation says to every poor boy: All the avenues of honor are open to you. Here we are all kings, kings by the divine right of living in a free republic. You left the green shores of Old England, the shamrock of Ireland, the sun lit hills of Italy, the German Fatherland, to be forever rid of the galling chains of aristocracy and nobility. "No people are so far separated by distance as by the walls of caste." You came proclaiming that you would live your convictions that the only right aristocracy in this world is the aristocracy of knowledge and virtue; that by no mere accident of birth can one man be above another; that he who denies to others rights he claims to himself is thus far a tyrant; that good conduct, correct morals and a bright mind shall be a passport to every field of life. What right has any man to say that because I am a farmer's son and eat my bread in the sweat of my brow I belong to the lower classes? Who appointed you, my high minded and high headed fellow citizen, made of the same clay that I am, blood of my blood and bone of my bone, to classify God's chosen people and place this man in that class and that man in another?

We deny the right. In the cities we hear of the Nabob streets, the bob streets, and quality hill, and of the upper classes and lower classes. We deny the division, that there are such and sometimes we hear the lament that this girl and that girl has married out of her station in life, my word for it when you find that unfortunate girl, nine cases out of ten she may thank her lucky stars for her great good fortune. Cast is the menace of our government. It contradicts the guiding star that brought us here, it denies equality, it opposes the foundation principles of our government. And to the bold free hearted farmer we must look to live the conviction that all men are created equal. In the country is the idea of equality. Tennyson has said:

> To him who in the love of nature
> Holds communion with her various forms,
> She speaks a varied language.

The rythm of the rain, the poetry of the seasons, the birth time, spring, the resurrection called autumn. Our eloquent American in his poem "The Home of Burns" has expressed our sentiment:

> Though Scotland boasts a thousand names
> Of Patriot, Prince and Peer,
> The noblest, grandest of them all
> Was loved and cradled here.
> Here lived the gentle peasant prince,
> The loving Cotter King
> Compared with whom the grandest Lord
> Is but a tinsel thing.
> 'Twas but a straw thatched cot,
> A hovel made of clay,
> One door shuts out the wind and storm,
> One window greets the day.
> And yet I stand within its doors
> And hold all kings in scorn,
> For here, beneath this lowly thatch
> Love's sweetest bard was born

The gates of Castle Garden shall ever swing outward, inviting the downtrodden and oppressed of every nation to our peaceful, prosperous shores. Let them come, we will purify them, purify them in the sunlight of liberty. Let them come with packs upon their backs and sorrow in their hearts, we will make them happy, contented and prosperous. Not the criminals and anarchists but the honest toiling liberty lovers across the waters. We have room enough; out upon the intellectual sea there is room for every sail; in the intellectual air there is room for every wing. Then welcome all to our happy shore; welcome the man who wants to raise wheat; welcome him who shall discover gold mines; welcome the man upon whose forehead falls the light of furnace fire; welcome the sailor who fights the sea; welcome all who worship at the shrine of American liberty.

We pay our allegiance to that flag because it floats over the bravest men, the fairest women; because no man can stand beneath its folds without becoming and without remaining free; because it defends its defenders and protects its protectors; because more brave blood has been shed in its defense than any other flags that waves in the light of heaven.

This republic is the blossom and the fruit of the great world's best endeavor. We have the best of all there is of art, of intelligence, of music and of songs: here fall the gentlest rains, the freshest dews; the stars in the courses fight for us, the sails of commerce are filled with the winds of prosperity, poor men have more to eat and wear; more and better houses; The flags of health are in the cheeks of our children; our wives are better dressed; our children wear more bright ribbon; the furnace fires are ever hot, the sky is filled with the smoke of industry and upon the cloud of smoke rests the bow of perpetual peace.

Let us glance into the future and ask: "What of the hour?" The future of Michigan looks bright indeed, the garden of the world, upon the great waterway between the two continents; no floods no cyclones, no convulsions of nature to destroy. Our sister Canada is already ripe for alliance with the union. This will surely take place at no distant day; and with Canada a part of us the position of Michigan will be commanding and our Detroit, the city of the straits, will then command the markets of the world, she will rival London and Pekin; Britton will be but on the outskirts, and when we who are now young shall bear with dignity our gray locks the ground on which we now stand may be the center of the commercial world.

In closing let me again say, as I have before intimated, in my humble judgement the Britons will never be slaves.

THE AFTERNOON.

The exercises began again at two o'clock and lasted fully four hours. They consisted of the ragmuffin procession and the races of various kinds. The ball games took place in the open field south of the village, but the races were given on the business street where the buildings could be utilized by the sight seers.

Two games of ball were played, the first between Dundee and Deerfield, and the second between Dundee and Britton. Dundee won both games and carried off the prize. The fantastic procession was not very lengthy but for downright, unadulterated outlandishness, it carried off the whole bakery, gasoline stove and all. For nearly an hour the whole town was turned up side down looking upon and chasing after the ragmuffins. The other races were well patronized and created much merriment. The crowd was greatly in the way sometimes, but it was a good natured crowd and everything passed off harmoniously.

Prizes were awarded in the ball games and various races as follows;—

Ball game—Dundee. Score 14 to 7.

Three Legged race—1st prize, Will Daykin and I. K. Fox. 2nd., Jim Cheever and Jack Bessy.

Hurdle race—I. K. Fox.

Rag Muffins. 1st. Wash Underwood and Bert Nichols, 2nd, Earle Leanardson and L. C. Hoagland, 3rd. Will Osgood.

Sack Race. 1st. stranger from Tecumseh, 2nd., J m Cheever.

Wheelbarrow race. Stranger from Tecumeh.

Foot Race. 1st., I. K. Fox, 2nd Stranger.

Egg Race. 1st., I. K. Fox, 2nd. Arthur Lee.

Mustang Race. Cow boy.

Lemonade stands without number were planted in different quarters of the town at all of which refreshments could be procured. There were two revolving swings which were well patronized throughout the day. The ten cent dances were in full blast throughout the afternoon and evening and all did a flourishing business. Ice cream and cake were served on John Britton's lawn by a committee of ladies, for the benefit of the Britton band. This enterprise received a liberal patronage as it deserved.

The buildings were many of them finely decorated with national flags and bunting, the display of colors on the Exelby House and the G. A. R hall attracting much attention and many compliments. Some of the private dwellings were also decorated.

Deputy Sheriff H. W. Stevens was about town all day having been sent down by Sheriff Baldwin to keep order and prohibit all games of chance, three card monte, etc. Three games of chance were broken up and general order and quiet prevailed throughout. In fact it was generally remarked that the crowd was a very orderly one for so large a one. The mustang races held the crowd and kept up the fun until dark. At sun down the main street was still lined with people. The exercises of the day closed with a grand display of fire works in the evening. Not a single accident occurred to mar the pleasure of the day. The officers and committees were united in devoting themselves to their duties, and to their labors the success of the celebration was in a large measure due. From first to last the celebration was a good old-fashioned Fourth of July blow out, and it will long be remembered as a red letter day in the annals of the village of Britton.

THE DESTRUCTION OF HAILEY.

Half a Million Lost in a Raging Conflagration—Worse Than Seattle.

BELLEVUE, Idaho, July 4.—The business portion of the mountain town of Hailey, but a few days ago the most prosperous town in Idaho, is now but a mass of smoldering ruins. The fire which raged there Tuesday exceeds, in proportion to the size of the town, that of Seattle. The total loss is closely estimated at $500,000. The insurance, on account of excessive rates, is small, being estimated at $150,000. Few residences were burned, fortunately, and but two families are left without means. No lives were lost. A few persons were slightly burned.

The Coming Masonic Conclave.

WASHINGTON CITY, July 8.—The Knights Templar triennial conclave executive committee held a well-attended meeting Saturday night. The secretary reported that quarters had been secured for 220 separate commanderies, numbering about 15,000 uniformed men, exclusive of bands. It was also stated that requests for accommodations were being received daily from all parts of the country, and that the coming conclave promises to be the largest ever held.

Northern Pacific Finances.

NEW YORK, July 4.—Dispatches stating that the Northern Pacific Railroad company intends to raise $15,000,000 in new bonds are confirmed at the different offices of the company here. One of the officials states that a plan for raising money to improve the Pacific coast property and acquire additional equipment, and also to take up the Oregon trans-continental bonds has been discussed, but nothing definite has been decided on. It will probably be in the shape of a collateral trust loan.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

A tale is wafted on the Saginaw breezes to the effect that Adam Forepaugh, Jr., bucked the tiger in his den in that city and captured $500 before he let up. Young Adam is doubtless a genuine animal tamer from Tamerswile.

A Grand Rapids contractor has a strike on his hands, his employes going out because he refused to liquidate a judgment obtained by a workman against him for wages alleged to be justly his due.

An engine on Peter's logging railway evidently tired of the monotonous job of hauling timbers and so jumped into the Manistee river for a bath. The engine, bridge and fireman were all disgusted.

The fate of the voracious rosebug is settled beyond all reasonable doubt. As long as it was contented with a diet of June roses the bug was O. K. But in an evil hour it tackled the half-grown and collicky peach and then trouble began—for the bug. The coroner's inquest will be held later.

The 10 per cent. racket seems to have struck the merchants of several Michigan towns amidships. The scheme is for some one merchant to sell his goods at a margin of 10 per cent. and thus gobble the bulk of the trade. Naturally enough 'tother fellows don't enjoy the situation.

Miss Jessie Hoppin, at one time a South Haven resident, is now teaching the natives of Honolulu, Sandwich islands.

A Belford chap gave his father a trouncing and then paid a justice of the peace $5 for the satisfaction he is supposed to have derived from the operation. Young America is a pretty fast youth, at least some specimens of him are.

The employes of R. G. Peters' saw-mill at Manistee had a lay-off of several days because some rantankerous cuss had slashed the $400 driving belt.

Kalamazoo druggists and doctors are playing to good business, owing to an epidemic of runaway hacks. The d's and d's of some other towns are secretly hoping it may prove contagious.

A tramp who was touring in the neighborhood of Port Huron was caught and beaten into insensibility for assaulting a young lady, after which the remains were thrown into a swamp. When consciousness returned the badly scarred and scared tourist made great haste to clamber for a healthier clime.

It beats all how touchy some femININES are. Friustanche, an Oscoda woman has caused the restraining arm of the law to be laid on her husband just because he threw her out of a second story window.

The wife of the Bay City poundmaster has been assessed the sum of $3 for pasturing her cows in the street. Seems as though some one once remarked about chickens coming home to roost.

A couple of Battle Creek people, representing both sections, were found insensible on the streets of that city the same day. Both were cases of an overdose of booze. The masculine was let off by the payment of a light fine, but the woman was sent to the Detroit house of correction for ninety days. The scales of justice aren't always equally poised—in a certain class of cases.

Some Tekonsha folks are vigorously kicking against the practice of street preaching. They're of the class who never see the inside of a church.

The state university has inconsiderately turned a drove of 146 Blackstoners loose on an unsuspecting community. And now it behooveth the farmer to live peaceably with his neighbor if he would retain even a respectable portion of his flocks and herds.

St. Clair church folks claim that the sinners of that town are very obdurate, and that's the reason why they are endeavoring to get Evangelist Moody to come and talk to 'em.

The Michigan Central's offer of $5,000 each for the victims of the Kalamazoo accident doesn't seem to comport with thee feelings of the living relatives, and damage suits begin to loom up on the legal horizon.

Muskegon saloonists and druggists seem to have had an eye on each other's business, and several arrests have been the mutual result of the local espionage.

A Gregorie, convicted of killing his wife, is the first local representative of the new Marquette prison. His time, eight years, is about the dose that is dealt out to the average horse thief.

No, we don't hanker for the position of justice disponser at Hillman. The present incumbent has had some experience that's quite enough, and we don't care to be stripped, dragged through a barnyard and then smeared with axle grease, just because a legal decision didn't give satisfaction. That sort of a bill of exceptions is a trifle sweeping.

East Saginaw burglars have the nerve of the regular "professh" and tackled the offices of a justice of the peace and deputy United States marshal the other night, pulling in $58 and a pair of handcuffs. "No clew."

Rev. G. H. Ferris is satisfied with his eleven years' experience in the jungles of India and is coming back to Hillsdale for a little comfort.

Rev. W. E. Howard, of Michigan and electric sugar fame, has settled down to his ten-years' job at the Sing Sing prison, and is reported to be apparently resigned thereto. Verily, the ways of the electric sugar refiner are varied if not altogether sweet.

An industrious and motherly Vermontville hen, not having enough to properly busy herself in bringing up a large brood of chickens, has adopted a kitten into her family by way of a diversified industry.

An Ypsilanti firm has just closed its first year's business in that city, and during that time handled a quarter of a million dozen eggs—hence this cackle.

Col. Hugh Richards, a Jackson lumberman, has caught on to 20,000 acres of hardwood lands in York state and will show the downeasters how to make things move with a hustle.

Engineer Frank Faulkner, who used to pull the throttle on Michigan locomotives but afterward engaged in the same business in Mississippi, was shot dead by a colored brakeman whom he had reprimanded for gross neglect of duty.

Bangor differs from Chicago in that her Dr. Crobin is still alive and practicing medicine. There's also some difference in their size, but when it comes to a bad breath it's about a stand-off between the onion fields of the former and the river water of the latter.

The kicking agricultural college students have persisted in their vocation until the college board have intimated right out loud that Professor Johnson may resign.

A Grand Rapids jury has decided that the payment of $7,000 to Miss Nellie Forter, by the West Michigan Railroad company, whose cars made her a life cripple some time since, would be about the proper thing to do.

The proposition to bond Traverse City for public improvements met with small opposition only a single ballot being cast against it.

A West Branch guzzler filled himself full of budge clear to the bung and then crawled into a stab consumer to take a nap. Those of our readers who've seen one of these furnaces in operation can readily imagine how brown and beautiful blistered the napper was in a very few seconds thereafter. But he was sober, even if he wasn't handsome.

H. L. Best, a Buchan citizen, was the owner of a $2,000 horse before some chap with a mighty small amount of discretion and the milk of human kindness in his makeup fed it with poison.

A St. Johns married man called on a Fowler lady after dark, and not being cordially received, tried to force an entrance. He didn't succeed, but has since carried a bullet which the young lady planted in his anatomy as a memento that she didn't appreciate his attentions.

THE FLOOD IN TEXAS.

An Improved Situation Noticeable at Fort Worth.

FORT WORTH, Tex., July 6.—The situation in the flooded district has improved in some respects, although the total rainfall was 9.7 inches. The wagon bridges are all relieved of water, and are found to be firm. Coal has been carried to the water-works pumping station in boats, and the pumps will be kept going. The railroads are some what worse than Thursday night. The northern outlet, that over the Santa Fe, is gone, the fine bridge over the Trinity being carried awa. They St. Louis, Arkansas and Texas has lost its bridge over the Fossil.

The Railways Disabled.

The Texas and Pacific lost a second bridge over Clear Ford Thursday night, this time three miles west of this city. The Texas and Pacific will not use its own track for several days, but will run trains over the Santa Fe to Cleburne and Weatherford, to get west, and to Cleburne and Dallas to get east. The Fort Worth and Denver and the Missouri, Kansas and Texas will be all right in a day or two. The Fort Worth and Denver comes within three miles of this city, and transfers around the washout.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTY HURT.

The Accident at Oklahoma City More Serious Than at First Supposed.

OKLAHOMA CITY, I. T., July 6.—The number of victims of Thursday's disaster is greater than was at first supposed. It is now estimated that about 150 people were more or less injured. Fully a dozen were dangerously hurt, and are lying in a critical condition. It was rumored that three of the victims died Friday, but diligent inquiry fails to confirm the report. Several received serious spinal injuries from which they may never fully recover. Several of the injured were placed in the cars on stretchers and returned to their distant homes. Friday much praise was being awarded Capt. Stiles for his prompt action in placing troops at the scene of the disaster to assist in rescuing the injured and for personally taking charge of the work himself. No efforts were made Friday to continue the festivities, which were intended to occupy the balance of the week.

A Chicago Murderer Unearthed.

CHICAGO, July 4.—Last February a druggist named Frank C. Clark, doing business on the west side, was found murdered in his store just after midnight. The case was one of those mysteries for which this city is rather noted. No clue to the murderer was found apparently, although several arrests were made, among them a woman. About the same period burglaries were of frequent occurrence in the same section of the city, and two detectives were put on the burglary case. They arrested four men, and believed that among them were the murderers of Clark. It turns out that they were right. One of the burglars was sent to penitentiary for eight years, and he has confessed. He says that Clark was shot, by one of his gang named Foy, while resisting robbery on the night in question. Foy is in the penitentiary for ten years for burglary, and has been identified.

An Aeronaut's Peril.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., July 6.—Professor Allen made a balloon ascension from this place Friday, rising to the hight of 1,200 feet, when the balloon collapsed. The wind had been shifting in a curious manner, and it is thought this tried the material of the balloon too severely. The great mass fell swiftly toward the earth, constantly rolling over and over, but the intrepid aeronaut succeeded in climbing into the rigging and cutting a hole in the canvas with his pocket knife. The gas rushed out and thereafter the balloon formed itself into a sort of parachute, descending slowly to the earth. Professor Allen was badly bruised but not seriously injured.

Petition for Harper's Pardon.

WASHINGTON, July 6.—The attorney general has received a large package of petitions for the pardon of E. L. Harper, the convicted vice president of the wrecked Fidelity National bank in Cincinnati. The signers of these petitions are national bank men, merchants and personal friends of Harper all over the country. A small number of protests against Harper's pardon have also been received. As Harper is believed by the government officials connected with his prosecution to have been the instigator and promotor of the broken bank's unlucky speculation, he is not likely to get much sympathy from this administration.

Offered to Professor Adams.

WASHINGTON CITY, July 6.—Superintendent Porter of the census has offered the position of expert and special agent for the collection of statistics relating to railroads, canals, telegraphs, telephone and steam navigation to Professor H. C. Adams, of Ann Ardor university. Mr. Adams has the offer under consideration. He is at present the statistician of the inter-state commerce commission. John S. Lord, chief clerk of the bureau of labor statistics of Illinois, has been offered the position of special agent for the collection of statistics relating to the recorded indebtedness of the people for the state of Illinois.

Tried to Dynamite a Newspaper.

BRADFORD, Pa., July 6.—Thursday night the office of The Evening Star in the produce exchange was visited by dynamiters and a dynamite cartridge, with a fuse and cap attached, placed on the floor inside of the door. The bomb was discovered by City Editor Wagner. He immediately notified Chief of Police McCrea, who at once repaired to The Star office and took charge of the dynamite. The explosive was examined by experts who pronounced it of sufficient strength to produce a most disastrous effect. There is no clue to the perpetrators of the outrage.

More Dissatisfaction at Johnstown.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., July 6.—The contract for the entire work of removing the remainder of the wreck was let Friday to McLain & Co., of Baltimore. This action of Chief Engineer Col. Douglass has caused indignation. Pittsburg and Altoona contractors were officially notified that their contracts with the state would terminate on Saturday. They will suffer heavy losses, the commissary department refusing to take their supplies off their hands. Gen. Hastings gives no reason for the change. Friday six more bodies were recovered.

A GENEROUS OFFER.—The celebrated Dr. Gleason, after a practice of forty years, having during all that time made the cure of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption his special study, has in this time so perfected his treatment as to be able to cure nearly all who suffer from these complaints. Having reached the age of seventy years, he realizes that the time is near at hand when these valuable remedies must be in other hands or become lost to the world. Desiring that his Home Treatment should be within the reach of all, he has placed the prescriptions with the Hall Chemical Company; this company, knowing the wonderful success of the Home Treatment in the cure of all Throat and Lung Troubles, have decided to send the full treatment ON TRIAL to any one who wishes to try it. Dr. Gleason has also written a valuable treatise on these diseases, which is profusely illustrated with finely executed wood-cuts, showing the Head, Throat and Lungs as they are when diseased; it discusses in an able manner the cause and cure of these complaints; it is printed on heavy super-calendered paper and handsomely bound. This book, together with full instructions how to order on trial, will be sent free to all who will write and ask for it. Address

SAMUEL THE REFORMER.

LESSON III, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 21.

Text of the Lesson, I Sam. vii, 1-12—Commit to Memory Verses 3-4—Golden Text, Isa. i, 16, 17—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

1. "And the men of Kirjath-jearim came and fetched up the Ark of the Lord." This holy vessel, the Ark of Jehovah, which was the most sacred vessel in the Tabernacle, or in the Temple, the same Ark being used in each, and which is mentioned now at least thirty-five times since chap. iii, 3, is to me one of the most interesting of Bible studies, and speaks to me of Jesus both as God and man, God's law in His heart, delighting to do the will of God, fulfilling all righteousness, the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth, our mercy seat, our hidden manna, our High Priest chosen by God, the great head of the church from whom the cherubim are formed, the revelation to us of the Father's love and eternal purpose; and yet, though it thus talks of all these glorious things, the full significance of it will not be known till the temple of God is opened in Heaven, and there is seen in His temple the Ark of His Covenant. (Rev. xi, 19.)

2. "While the ark abode in Kirjath-jearim * * * it was twenty years; and all the house of Israel lamented after the Lord." We know from II Sam. vi, 1-3, that the ark was in the house of Abinadab a very much longer period than twenty years; but the last clause of this verse may indicate that this was the period that elapsed after the return of the ark before Israel was awakened from her sin to gather together unto the Lord.

3. "Return unto the Lord with all your hearts, put away the strange gods, * * * prepare your hearts unto the Lord, and serve Him only." This was the exhortation of Samuel to Israel as they lamented after the Lord, and he assured them that if they would thus sincerely turn to God He would deliver them out of the hand of the Philistines.

5. "I will pray for you unto the Lord." In Jas. v, 16, we are told that "the effectual, fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much," and we know that Moses by his intercession saved Israel from destruction more than once. In Jer. xv, 1, Moses and Samuel are associated as men mighty in prayer. God told Abimelech that Abraham would pray for him and thus bring blessing to him and his house (Gen. xx, 7, 17); and Abraham's intercession for Sodom (Gen. xviii, 20-33) is a memorable occasion. It is to be feared that much prayer is simply saying words, but that only is true prayer which is asking from the heart, in the name of Jesus, for that which we really desire for His glory.

6. "They gathered together, drew water, poured it out before the Lord, fasted on that day and said there, We have sinned against the Lord." The pouring out of water symbolized their helpless and penitent condition; they were as water spilt on the ground which cannot be gathered up again (II Sam. xiv, 14); they had nothing to plead but their guilt and their great need, and convinced of this they turn with fasting unto the Lord.

7. "The Philistines heard." Let the people of God come together in true humiliation to seek Him and the enemies of God will be sure to hear of it. It is surely true that "Satan trembles when he sees the weakest saint upon his knees," and if one praying saint makes him tremble a nation in true penitential prayer must make him awfully afraid, so that we do not wonder that the Philistines gather against Israel when they hear that Israel have gathered unto the Lord. It is not necessary to suppose that the Philistines understood the true meaning of Israel's gathering, but the devil understood it and he incited the Philistines onward.

8. "Cease not to cry unto the Lord our God for us." This was their prayer to Samuel. It is good to hear them say "the Lord our God," and they have a right to say it now since they have truly turned to Him, and He will undoubtedly prove Himself to be "the Lord their God," for He says, "Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee and thou shalt glorify me." (Psalms l, 15). In the same way Hezekiah asked Isaiah to pray unto God for Judah, when they were besieged by the army of Sennacherib, and God heard (Isaiah xxxvii, 4, 6). The words "cease not" remind us of the command to "pray without ceasing" (I Thes. v, 17), and we remember that when Moses' hands were held up Israel prevailed, and when they were let down Amalek prevailed (Ex. xvii, 11).

9. "And Samuel took a sucking lamb and offered a burnt offering wholly unto the Lord, and Samuel cried unto the Lord for Israel, and the Lord heard him." The burnt offering typifies the sacrifice of the Lord Jesus, who is all offerings in one, the only sacrifice for sin; and reminds us that without shedding of blood there is no remission, and that only in the name and by virtue of the merits of Christ can we draw near or come to God. (Heb. ix, 22; Acts iv, 12.) Samuel did not approach God because he was holy or trusting in his merits, but only as one who believed God and came trusting in the sacrifice, thus trusting he came with confidence in God and was heard. In I John v, 14, 15, we read that "This is the confidence we have in Him, that if we ask anything according to His will He heareth us, and if we know that He hear us, whatsoever we ask, we know that we have the petitions that we desired of Him."

10. "The Philistines drew near to battle against Israel; but the Lord thundered with a great thunder * * * and discomfited them." The Philistines may have thought that as they conquered even when the ark was in the camp of Israel, so they would conquer now, but circumstances had changed. At that time Israel relied on the ark, and it was simply a battle between men and men, but now Israel was relying upon God, and it was a conflict between the Philistines and the God of Israel, and consequently they could not but be smitten. Thunder is the voice of Jehovah (Ps. xxix, 3, 4; Job xxxvii, 1-5; John xii, 28, 29) and when He speaks in judgment none can stand before Him, all His enemies must fall. How thankful we ought to be that God in His mercy is speaking to us so lovingly in His word and that His judgments are not yet made manifest; but let every teacher show the scholars from the word of God that there is wrath for all who will not accept Jesus, and because the day of mercy may for each end any time, therefore, urge every one to turn quickly to God, receive Jesus as their Saviour, and with sincere heart serve Him only.

11, 12. "Ebenezer, hitherto hath the Lord helped us." Israel pursued and smote the Philistines, for the Lord fought for them, and Samuel, to commemorate the victory and strengthen Israel's faith in the future, set up this stone and called it Ebenezer, saying, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." The word Ebenezer is only found in these three places (chaps. iv, 1; v, 1, vii, 12) the first two referring to the victory of the Philistines, but this one to the victory of Israel when they truly repented and relied on Jehovah. How many places can we look back to where the enemy conquered because we were sinful and disobedient, and in how many such places have we now set up an Ebenezer to mark the fact that where once we fell because of sin we now stand firm because we have repented, rely only on the Lord and serve Him only!

NEWS OF THE SLUGGERS.

John L. Gets a "Jug" on at Chicago—Kilrain and Mitchell.

CHICAGO, July 14.—Jake Kilrain, who arrived here Saturday, left town early Sunday in disguise. His destination is unknown, but it is presumed he is trying to reach Canada.

Sullivan who has been stopping in South Chicago, came into the city yesterday afternoon. He visited the "levee" and from there went to Tom Gurley's saloon on Third avenue. Here he met "Sailor" Brown, the man who spurred the Australian last Thursday evening. Sullivan approached Brown and said: "So you spar with niggers, do you?" at the same time hitting him heavily on the face. Sullivan was having a pretty wild time about town last night.

Mitchell Going East.

BUFFALO, N. Y., July 15.—Charlie Mitchell arrived at the Mansion house yesterday, and left for New York last night. It is said that Mitchell arrived in Chicago in the guise of a tramp, having exchanged a $75 suit of clothes for a farmer's outfit worth $7. The party was closely hunted in Indiana, and had to take to the woods, as it were.

Preparing for Statehood.

BOISE CITY, Idaho, July 15.—In the constitutional convention Saturday a section was adopted absolutely prohibiting polygamy in every form. Corporations receive much attention in the way of restrictions preventing railroads from pooling, from discriminating, or consolidating with parallel lines.

SIOUX FALLS, D. T., July 15.—The only feature of the business of the territorial convention Saturday was the presentation of a design for the great seal of the state of South Dakota, as provided for by the first section of the constitution. The design was referred to the proper committee.

BISMARCK, D. T., July 15.—The territorial convention received a deluge of propositions Saturday, corporations coming in for a large share of attention. Railways are declared under legislative control in fixing their rates. A proposition for courts to arbitrate labor disputes was presented.

Killed by a Stroke of Lightning.

GETTYSBURG, Pa., July 13.—Two men, named Horner and Reifsnyder, were killed in a barn ten miles south of here Thursday by a stroke of lightning. The barn was set on fire and destroyed.

THIRD POINT

You should read the CHICAGO DAILY NEWS because it's an independent newspaper. There are two sides to every political question, and THE DAILY NEWS gives them both with equal fairness. A party organ magnifies one side and dwarfs the other. No sensible man wants to be trifled with in this fashion. The time has gone by when American citizens expect to inherit their political opinions. They want to make their own—and to do this they want a paper to tell them the truth, regardless of their own personal preferences. If you are an honest man, independent and self-reliant in thought, read an honest and independent newspaper—read The CHICAGO DAILY NEWS.

Remember—Its circulation is 220,000 a day—over a million a week—and it costs by mail 25 cts. a month, four months $1.00,—one cent a day.

The Great War Syndicate.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON.

Author of "Rudder Grange," "Amos Kilbright," "The Bee Man of Orn," "The Christmas Wreck," "The Lady or the Tiger," "The Late Mrs. Null," "The Hundredth Man," "The Casting Away of Mrs. Lecks and Mrs. Aleshine," "The Dusantes," etc.

When the commander found that he was bound for the Bermudas he did not understand it, unless, indeed, those islands had been captured by the enemy. But he did not stop firing. Indeed, should he find the Bermudas under the American flag, he would fire at that flag and whatever carried it, as long as a shot or a shell or a charge of powder remained to him.

But when he reached British waters, and slowly entering St. George's harbor, saw around him the British flag floating as proudly as it floated above his own great ship, he confessed himself utterly bewildered; but he ordered the men at every gun to stand by their piece until he was boarded by a boat from the fort and informed of the true state of affairs.

But even then, when weary Crab C raised herself from her fighting depth and steamed to a dock, the commander of the Adamant could scarcely refrain from sending a couple of tons of iron into the beastly sea devil which had the impertinence to tow him about against his will.

No time was lost by the respective governments of Great Britain and the United States in ratifying the peace made through the syndicate, and in concluding a military and naval alliance, the basis of which should be the use by these two nations, and by no other nations, of the instantaneous motor. The treaty was made and adopted with much more dispatch than generally accompanies such agreements between nations, for both governments felt the importance of placing themselves without delay in that position from which, by means of their united control of paramount methods of warfare, they might become the arbiters of peace.

The desire to evolve that power which should render opposition useless had long led men from one warlike invention to another. Every one who had constructed a new kind of gun, a new kind of armor or a new explosive thought that he had solved the problem or was on his way to do so. The inventor of the instantaneous motor had done it.

The treaty provides that all subjects concerning hostilities between either or both of the contracting powers and other nations should be referred to a joint high commission, appointed by the two powers, and if war should be considered necessary, it should be prosecuted and conducted by the Anglo-American war syndicate, within limitations prescribed by the high commission.

The contract made with the new syndicate was of the most stringent order, and contained every provision that ingenuity or foresight of man could invent or suggest to make it impossible for the syndicate to transfer to any other nation the use of the instantaneous motor.

Throughout all classes in sympathy with the administrative parties of Great Britain and the United States there was a feeling of jubilant elation on account of the alliance and the adoption by the two nations of the means of prohibitive warfare. The public sentiment acted even upon the opposition; and the majority of army and navy officers in the two countries felt bound to admit that the arts of war in which they had been educated were things of the past. Of course there were members of the army and navy in both countries who deprecated the new state of things. But there were also men still living who deprecated the abolition of the old wooden seventy-four gun ship.

A British artillery officer, conversing with a member of the American syndicate at a London club, said to him:

"Do you know that you made a great mistake in the beginning of your operations with the motor guns? If you had contrived an attachment to the motor which should have made an infernal thunderclap and a storm of smoke at the moment of discharge, it would have saved you a lot of money and time and trouble. The work of the motor on the Canadian coast was terrible enough, but people could see no connection between that and the guns on your vessel. If you could have sooner shown that connection you might have saved yourselves the trouble of crossing the Atlantic. And, to prove this, one of the most satisfactory points connected with your work on the Welsh coast was the jet of smoke which came from the repeller every time she discharged a motor. If it had not been for those jets I believe there would be people now in the opposition who would swear that Caerdaff had been mined, and that the ministry were a party to it."

"Your point is well taken," said the American, "and should it ever be necessary to discharge any more bombs—which I hope it may not be—we shall take care to show a visible and audible connection between cause and effect."

"The devil take it, sir!" cried an old captain of an English ship of the line, who was sitting near by. "What you are talking about is not war! We might as well send out a codfish trust to settle national disputes. In the next sea fight we'll save ourselves the trouble of gnawing and crunching at the sterns of the enemy. We'll simply send a note aboard requesting the foreigner to be so good as to send us his rudder by bearer, which, if properly marked and numbered, will be returned to him on the conclusion of peace. This would do just as well as twisting it off, and save expense. No, sir, I will not join you in a julep. I have made no alliance over new fangled inventions! Waiter, fetch me some rum and hot water!"

In the midst of the profound satisfaction with which the members of the American war syndicate regarded the success of their labors—labors alike profitable to themselves and to the recently contending nations—and in the gratified pride with which they received the popular and official congratulations which were showered upon them, there was but one little cloud, one regret.

In the course of the great syndicate war a life had been lost. Thomas Hutchins, while assisting in the loading of coal on one of the repellers, was accidentally killed by the falling of a derrick.

The syndicate gave a generous sum to the family of the unfortunate man, and throughout the United States the occurrence occasioned a deep feeling of sympathetic regret. A popular subscription was started to build a monument to the memory of Hutchins, and contributions came, not only from all parts of the United States but from many persons in Great Britain, who wished to assist in the erection of this tribute to the man who had fallen in the contest which had been of as much benefit to their country as to his own.

Some weeks after the conclusion of the treaty a public question was raised, which at first threatened to annoy the American government, but it proved to be of little moment. An anti-administration paper in Peakville, Ark., asserted that in the whole of the published treaty there was not one word in regard to the fisheries question, the complications arising from which had been the cause of the war. Other papers took up the matter, and the government then discovered that in drawing up the treaty the fisheries business had been entirely overlooked. There was a good deal of surprise in official circles when this discovery was announced; but as it was considered that the fisheries question was one which would take care of itself, or be readily disposed of in connection with a number of other minor points which remained to be settled between the two countries, it was decided to take no notice of the implied charge of neglect, and to let the matter drop. And as the opposition party took no real interest in the question but little more was said about it.

"WHAT YOU ARE TALKING ABOUT IS NOT WAR!"

Both countries were too well satisfied with the general result to waste time or discussion over small matters. Great Britain had lost some forts and some ships, but these would have been comparatively useless in the new system of warfare. On the other hand, she had gained not only the incalculable advantage of the alliance, but a magnificent and unsurpassed landlocked basin on the coast of Wales.

The United States had been obliged to pay an immense sum on account of the contract with the war syndicate, but this was considered money so well spent, and so much less than an ordinary war would have cost, that only the most violent anti-administration journals ever alluded to it.

Reduction of military and naval forces and gradual disarmament was now the policy of the allied nations. Such forces and such vessels as might be demanded for the future operations of the war syndicate were retained. A few field batteries of motor guns were all that would be needed on land, and a comparatively small number of armored ships would suffice to carry the motor guns that would be required at sea.

Now there would be no more mere exhibitions of the powers of the instantaneous motor bomb. Hereafter, if battles must be fought, they would be battles of annihilation.

This is the history of the great syndicate war. Whether or not the Anglo-American syndicate was ever called upon to make war, is not to be stated here. But certain it is that after the formation of this syndicate all the nations of the world began to teach English in their schools, and the Spirit of Civilization raised her head with a confident smile.

THE END.

Epoch

The transition from long, lingering and painful sickness to robust health marks an epoch in the life of the individual. Such a remarkable event is treasured in the memory and the agency whereby the good health has been attained is greatfully blessed. Hence it is that so much is heard in praise of Electro Bitters. So many feel they owe their restoration to health, to the use of the Great Alterative and Tonic. If you are troubled with any disease of Kidneys, Liver or Stomach, of long or short standing you will surely find relief by use of Electric Bitters. Sold at 50c. and $1 per bottle at

C. A. Wright & Co.

WHY IS IT

That people linger along always complaining about that continual tired feeling? One bottle of BEGG'S PURIFIER and BLOOD MAKER will entirely remove this feeling, give them a good appetite and regulate digestion.

J. J. Orr, Druggist.

HOW CAN PARENTS

allow their children to cough and strain and cough and calmly say: "Oh! it is only a little cold." and keep giving them cheap and dangerous medicines, until they are down with lung fever or consumption, when they can be so easily relieved by BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP? It has no superior, and few equals. J. J. ORR, Druggist.

COST THE TOWN TWO MILLIONS.

Ellensburg, W. T, the Latest Place to be Wiped Out by Fire.

ELLENSBURG, W. T., July 6.—Fire broke out at 11 o'clock Thursday night in the grocery store of J. T. Anthony on Main street. A high wind prevailed and it soon spread to adjoining frame buildings and then got beyond control, sweeping the entire business portion of the city, embracing Main street from Fifth to First, Fourth from Main to Pine, Third from Water to Sprague, and Pearl from Fifth to Second, covering an area of ten blocks in the business heart of the city. Two hundred houses were destroyed, and the space burned over is about fifty acres. The loss as near as can be ascertained is $2,000,000—$750,000 in buildings and $1,250,000 in goods.

THREE BOYS DROWNED.

KANSAS CITY, MO., June 28.—Three boys from this city, named Edward Camp, Fred H. Brice, and Frank Orricott, got into water over their depth while bathing in the Blue river, at Sheffield, yesterday afternoon, and were drowned. Their bodies were recovered.

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No! medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

J. J. ORR Druggist.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we recive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

WRITING MACHINE CABINET and OFFICE DESK

The advantages of this Type-writer and Office Desk over all other so-called Combination Cabinets, are:

First.—The ease and simplicity with which the desk is changed from a Library or Office Desk to a Type-writer Table. This change is effected by pushing the lid covering the machine back in the rear of cabinet—it being a roller top—removing it entirely from sight, thus overcoming the objectionable board and sounder in front of the operator. The movable top is perfectly flat, is baize covered, and forms a complete writing desk when the machine is not in use. The table on which the machine rests is so evenly balanced by our patent adjustments that it needs but a slight touch to bring the machine in position.

Second.—The advantages of the swinging table are: The table is so balanced near its center on patent maleable iron arms, that when the machine brought in place for use, it does not depend on ropes or hangers at rear of platform for support, but is held rigidly in place by its own weight, making it impossible for the machine to be tumbled down an incline in back of desk by the breaking of a rear support. The machine rests on patent slides which keeps the machine in place, and can be drawn out beyond the desk, well under the operator's hand.

Third.—The construction of the lid closing machine space makes it air tight, and the table having felt around its boarders thoroughly protects the machine from dust.

Fourth.—The foot rest and the construction of the table adjustments makes the desk as ridged as though the top was one solid board, which is a matter of great importance where a solid type-writing table is required. No operator can do good work on a shaky table.

Lastly.—The cabinet is a splendid piece of cabinet work. We manufacture them in Walnut, Antique Oak, Natural Oak, Natural Cherry, Cherry imitation, Mahogany and Ash.

Agents wanted to sell these cabinets, and where we have no agencies established we will sell direct from our works at wholesale prices.

31 YEARS AGO

the Threshing Machines then in use were almost wholly of the class known as the "Endless Apron" style. Then it was that Nichols & Shepard, of Battle Creek, Mich., invented and began to develop an entirely new and novel style of Grain Thresher and Separator, which they very appropriately named the "Vibrator."

It was a revolution in Threshing Machines, and from a small beginning of five machines in 1858 they soon reached a product of 1,000 yearly.

Their Vibrator drove the "Endless Apron" machine out of market, and all other makers copied it as closely as they dared. To-day all Threshing Machines of any reputation or merit use the principles of the old Vibrator. Nichols & Shepard have continued in the business without change of name, location, or management; and during the past three years have brought out and developed another new Threshing Machine for grain and seeds, as superior to all existing machines as their former was to the 'Endless Apron.' They name this new and improved Thresher

THE EDITORS' OUTING.

THE TWENTY-SECOND ANNUAL SESSION OF THE MICHIGAN PRESS ASSOCIATION HELD AT GRAND RAPIDS.

The Knights of the Quill take the Valley City by Storm—Four Days of Business and Pleasure—Michigan Editors at their Best—A Synopsis of What was Said and Done by One Who Was There.

A very few of the editors of Michigan are abundantly able, if inclination prompts them, to take a trip to the seaside or to Europe during the summer months, but a large majority of them are denied that privilege. Hence they regard the annual meeting of the State Press Association as the most suitable time and place for their summer outing, and they arrange their plans to make the most of it. Our proper place as well as our inclinations enroll us in the ranks of the majority, and hence we decided to follow our usual custom and take in the whole show this year. The route selected was via the Lake Shore to Jackson, and thence over the Central to Grand Rapids. As the care of extra baggage affords good mental discipline on such trips, and as the best method of securing it is to take along a lady companion, we prevailed upon our sister Loana to accompany us.

THE START.

The late train for Jackson on Monday evening found us among the passengers, and in due time we alighted at the Central city. We were out in good season Tuesday morning, and the hours before ten o'clock—the time for the departure of the Central train—was passed in looking up some of our old Tecumseh acquaintances

THE CENTRAL CITY.

Jackson is certainly entitled to its reputation of being one of the smartest towns in Michigan.

W. A. Richard is located in a new brick block at 137 Main st., where he is engaged in the merchant tailoring business. He has a fine establishment and is evidently prospering.

One of the first men we met on leaving the hotel was Col. Hugh Richard. We accepted an invitation from him to take a short drive through the western part of the city, and made the most of the brief hour at our disposal We halted a moment at his new residence on Wildwood avenue. He has an elegant dwelling house, one of the finest in the city, in a beautiful location, which he moved into the first of May. The Colonel has his hands full of business these days. His real estate at Jackson, his mining interests at Hurley, Wis., and his recent lumber purchase in Northern New York give him enough work to keep two ordinary men busy. But he is blessed with excellent physical health, is never hurried or worried, and always has time to entertain his friends. In both his business and domestic relations, the Colonel is most happily situated to enjoy life to the utmost, and he evidently does enjoy life too. During our drive we took a circuit around the new mammoth shops of the Smith Purifier Co. These shops cover several acres of land and are now in process of construction. They will be occupied within sixty days. This company is the leading industry of Jackson, and one of the largest in the state. The Colonel pointed out many other objects of interest about the city during our short ride, which we enjoyed immensely.

Miss Lola Monaghan still holds a desk in R. D. Knowles' law and pension office. She has become an expert type-writer, which gives her a permanent position at a good salary.

We made a short call on the Hibbard Rheumatic Syrup Co. They have lately moved into a large three story double front brick block opposite the Central depot, and occupy the entire building with their rapidly increasing business. This institution is now recognized as one of the leading business industries of Jackson, and under its present efficient management, large possibilities are opening before it in the future.

Time shortened our call on Toomey Bros. dry goods and notion emporium. This firm is one of the oldest and strongest in Jackson. They are not only doing an immense retail trade, but are working up an extensive wholesale business also.

We found the Patriot newspaper nicely settled in new and commodious quarters on the corner of Francis and Courtland sts. The counting room and press rooms are on the lower floor, and the entire office is very conveniently situated. The Patriot is one of the few newspapers in Michigan that has always made money, and it was never more prosperous than now. The paper is ably edited, prudently managed, and commands a large circulation and influence. Bro. Carlton is well fixed

Our former Tecumseh druggist, E. E. Russell, was getting well started in his laundry business, located at 131 Courtland st., but a purchaser came along one day last week and he sold out. He is now looking for a job.

ON THE ROAD AGAIN.

The Grand Rapids train was nearly an hour late, but it left about eleven o'clock, and the ride of four hours to the Valley city was hot and dusty enough to give one a reasonable foretaste of what editors are coming to hereafter. Hot, hotter, hottest, with every mile. Dust and smoke to the right, to the left, above and beneath us. But we were neither overtaken by a flood nor wrecked in a collision, and at three o'clock we arrived in dirt and safety at Grand Rapids.

THE FIRST SESSION.

After a hurried lunch we proceeded at once to Hartman's hall where the public sessions of the association were held. The stage was tastily decorated with potted plants and flowers. Seats were provided on the platform for the officers, those taking part in the program, and newspaper reporters. The sessions on Tuesday afternoon and evening were of a public character and were quite largely attended by residents of the city as well as by members of the association. A large banner on the wall in the rear of the stage bore the inscription—"Welcome Mich. Press Association."

The afternoon meeting opened with an informal reception and hand shaking, during which the members who had arrived, enrolled their names and received their programs and badges.

The program opened with music by Hellenstein's orchestra, followed by prayer, and an address of welcome by Mayor Killean. At the close he presented President Brearley with a mammoth wooden key, stating that it was the key to the city, and that if the editors saw anything they wanted to take it. President Brearley gave a neat response, and the orchestra gave another selection. The several standing committees were appointed and the business organization perfected. A phonograph was placed upon the stage and I. W. Butterfield, of Detroit, representing the Michigan Phonograph Co. gave a few illustrations of the practical use of the same. A compositor set some type and a young lady transcribed a letter upon the typewriter from its dictation. After adjournment the members went upon the stage and listened to band music executed through the instrument. A cornet solo executed through the instrument could be quite plainly heard on the floor of the hall, and without the use of the rubber tubes.

The hour after supper was utilized in looking up some Tecumseh acquaintances. Taking the cable cars on Lyon st. we rode up the bluff to Lafayette st., and a walk of one block brought us to No. 257 Crescent ave., the home of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Ware. Mrs. Ware was formerly Lizzie Hayden. We found the family enjoying the evening's shade on the front porch. Miss Clara Hayden, who has been visiting at Mr Ware's for several weeks, was also there. Mr. Ware is quite nicely situated and our call, though informal, was a very pleasant one.

TUESDAY EVENING SESSION.

The approach of night fall admonished us to return to Hartmann's hall for the evening meeting. The weather was fearfully hot and the members were somewhat tardy in assembling, but a good audience finally gathered and the program presented was decidedly entertaining. The orchestra gave a fine selection. Vocal music by the Schubert club followed This was a club of twelve male voices, and their singing was superb. They gave two numbers during the evening and were called back both times with a rousing encore.

"Hy" Potts, of Grand Haven, gave an address after the Bill Nye style. After turning a few jokes very neatly he suddenly retired to the ante-room to faint, being overcome by the heat. He returned however in about half an hour, apparently none the worse for wear, and finished his address. "Hy" possesses the elements of a first-class humorist, and he should cultivate his talents in that direction.

A Press song, composed by Major J. W. Long, of Grand Rapids, was then sung "by the gang" in which the Schubert club and the singers among the ladies rendered some valuable assistance. The president of the association, W. H. Brearley, of Detroit, gave his address, which contained some excellent practical suggestions. V. J. Tefft, of Mason, read a poem of decided merit, which was beautifully composed and not too long. C. B. Lewis, of Detroit, better known as "M. Quad," favored the audience with one of his characteristic speeches which was greatly enjoyed by all. A Triumphal March by the orchestra closed the meeting. The program of this evening was the best one given during the sessions of the convention and held the audience till a late hour, notwithstanding the torrid state of the weather.

WEDNESDAY FORENOON.

The morning's session opened with a few more exhibitions of the phonograph A piece of band music executed on Coney Island was repeated through the instrument loud enough to be heard plainly in the hall. Conversation cannot be heard so readily but is usually taken by placing a rubber tube to the ear. We could hear the music distinctly ourselves, by the aid of the rubber tube, notwithstanding our deafness.

Mort L. Hopkins, editor of the Grand Rapids Democrat, who was formerly on the staff of the Chicago Times, read a very interesting article on "Storey and the Times," consisting of reminiscences of that remarkable man. A letter was read from Ex-Mayor Weston, who was detained in New York on business and could not be present to fill his place on the regular program. Eli F. Harrington, of Grand Rapids, read a paper on "The Business End of Journalism," which contained many good points. An invitation was received from the Chase Bros. to visit their piano factory, which many of the members accepted.

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON.

The program for this afternoon contemplated a visit to the races, but a shower arose about noon and for two hours a copious fall of rain drenched the streets and cooled the atmosphere. The races were off for that day, and we utilized the afternoon in making personal calls.

AMONG OLD ACQUAINTANCES.

Harry Snell is located in fine rooms in the new Widdecomb block, and is working up a fine trade. His business is that of wholesaling lumber, with a specialty of shingles. Miss Julia Snell has a desk in his office. His family occupy a nice residence in the southern part of the city on Morrison street only one block from a car line. He is getting a fine start in business.

Dr. H. W. Catlin is located at 121 Monroe st. His office is on the second floor and he occupies a suit of living rooms on the third floor, his mother, Mrs. Catlin, keeping house for him. Bert is gradually working up a fine medical practice there.

Mrs. C. E. Closs, a relative of Mrs. Dr. Kimball's, of Adrian, and an old acquaintance, is located at 476 South Division street, where she carries on an extensive millinery business. Mrs Closs has resided in the city for several years and is well acquainted there, and gave us several suggestions which we found valuable on the following day. James Curry, our old Tecumseh barber, has a shop on Division st., but a few numbers from Mrs. Closs. Le Roy Evans, who works in the round house of the Lansing & Northern road lives in the same vicinity. We accidentally met him at Curry's barber rooms.

The last hour before supper, in company with Mrs. Catlin, we made a tour of the elegant club rooms of the O-wash-ta-nong boat club. This is the toney social club of the city. They have elegant apartments, sumptuously furnished, occupying four fronts and two stories in a large business block, which comprise reception and toilet rooms, gymnasium, billiard room, dining and lunch rooms, etc. The badge of the association was the only admission ticket we needed. The hour at this club resort was well spent.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The session this evening at Hartman's hall, which was quite lengthy, was devoted entirely to business routine. It was decided to hold the next annual meeting at Saginaw. The election of officers resulted as follows:

President—Perry F. Powers, Cadillac News and Express.

Vice Pres.—C. T. Fairfield, Eaton Rapids Journal.

Treas.—N. H. Miller, Cheasaning Argus.

Executive Committee—Geo F. Lewis, Saganawian; Chas. W. Peters, Saginaw News; Theo. Quinby, Detroit Free Press; A. McMillan, Bay City Press; Fred Rushell, Saginaw Courier, and Robert Swing of the Saginaw Herald.

Ten delegates were also chosen to attend the National Press Association which meets at Detroit in August.

After the evening meeting we made a call at the office of the Daily Democrat and enjoyed a pleasant chat with Clarence Cotton, son of A. B. Cotton, who is now a reporter on the Democrat staff. The Democrat is the leading morning newspaper in Western Michigan, and is to the Democracy of Grand Rapids what the Free Press is to Detroit. Mr. Cotton had full charge of writing up the Press association sessions, and the reports in the Democrat were far superior to those of its city contemporaries. Clarence is doing excellent work in his present position and is likely to remain for some time.

A DAY OF FEASTING AND FUN.

Thursday was given up entirely to pleasure. Promptly at nine o'clock the editors and their ladies gathered at the Morton House where they took carriages for a drive about the city. The rain of the previous afternoon had cooled the air and laid the dust, and the Valley City, always beautiful, was as attractive and enticing that morning as a bride in her wedding attire. The procession numbered about fifty hacks, and made quite an imposing appearance, as it wended its way through the principal streets. We first traversed the bluffs in the southern part where the finest residences are located; thence north to the stand pipe of the water works, the highest point in the city; thence four miles out to the Soldiers' Home. A half hour was spent in going through the building. Gen Pierce, the commandant, made our short stay as pleasant as possible. We returned to the city by the west road, which led by the big factories and lumber yards along the river. Crossing the river a halt was made at the mammoth shops of the Phoenix Furniture Co. Here the fire department gave an exhibition drill, which was a grand sight. A general alarm was sounded, and within five minutes thirteen streams of water were shooting from the hose. The extension ladders were raised to the roof of the factory in about three minutes time. The visitors then returned to their hotels for dinner.

CLAM BAKE AT REED'S LAKE.

At two o'clock a special train of five coaches left the Union Depot over the D. L. & N. road for Reed's Lake. The lake is a beautiful body of water located four miles south-east of Grand Rapids, and is just about as large as Sand Lake in this county. A line of street cars runs to the west bank, and a spur of the Lansing and Northern road runs to the south bank. At the terminus of the street car line there is a large summer hotel, much like Beardsell's at Devils Lake, and the rail road is erecting another large pavilion at their terminus. Three steamers, similar to those on Devil's Lake, and row boats without number, afford ample boating accommodations. In a beautiful grove near the pavilion and but a few rods from the west shore, tables had been spread for three hundred guests. The baking pits were fired the night before. The "clam-bake" was conducted in the orthodox down-east yankee fashion. Large pits are dug in the earth and filled with stone. A fire is built upon these and kept running until the stone are intensely heated. Then sheets are filled with clams, oysters, fish, green corn, sweet potatoes, lobsters, etc., which are laid on the stone piles. These are covered with sea weeds and a coating of sand is placed over the whole. In this air tight furnace the eatables steam and cook for several hours. At four o'clock the guests were seated at the tables, the pits were uncovered and the viands spread before the crowd. The food from the pits was magnificently cooked, and it was supplemented with a proper supply of drinkables, salads and water melon. The banquet was a grand success in every detail. At the close of the feast, President Brearley introduced James H. Stone of the Detroit Tribune to the crowd, who proceeded in a few facetious words to "cane" Major Long, presenting him in behalf of the association with an elegant gold headed cane. The Major was taken quite by surprise but he returned his thanks in a very happy manner. The company then scattered, some lounging about the grove, some riding on the "switch-back," some taking a ride on the steamer and some rowing about the lake. The O-wash ta-nong Club have a large boat house at the lake, which was free to all the visitors. Its capacious verandah overlooking the lake was a favorite rendezvous for the crowd.

THE HOP.

Soon after dark the upper room of the Club House was lighted and the hop began. The room is fully as large as Armory Hall in Tecumseh, nicely furnished, with canvas covered floor. A first-class orchestra provided music, and for a couple of hours the club house resounded to the tripping toes of the merry dancers. At 11 o'clock the company boarded the Belknap, took a ride around the lake and thence by special train back to the city.

THE FINISH.

Friday morning closed the festivities of the week in Grand Rapids. For three days the members of the association enjoyed the hospitalities of that beautiful city, and never were they more bountifully provided for. The purple badge of the society literally served as a key to unlock the city. The editors who were there will long remember with delight the three days spent in bustling, beautiful, bountiful, business like Grand Rapids

COMING HOME.

Some of the visitors left for home on Friday morning, but most of them—enough to fill six coaches—boarded an excursion train on the West Michigan road at 8:30 o'clock. A pleasant ride of three hours brought us to St. Joseph, where we alighted and proceeded directly to "Plank's Tavern, on the Beach." The house is new; in fact it is not fully finished, but it is now receiving guests. It is a mammoth structure, stretching along the beach for 500 feet. With the exception of Plank's Grand Hotel at Mackinac, it is the largest summer resort in the world. John O. Plank, the owner of these two resorts, also runs the Whitcomb in St. Joe and the Plankinton in Detroit. Upon stepping up to the office desk to register, who shor'd we find but our friend Mark Burnett of Toledo. Mark has left his own Hotel in charge of "the boys" while he superintends the office at Plank's Tavern. A better man for that responsible position could not have been found. A sumptuous dinner put the guests in good humor, and at two o'clock they embarked on the steamer City of Detroit bound for Chicago. It was a beautiful afternoon and the trip across the lake was most enjoyable. We arrived at Chicago about seven o'clock in a big thunder shower. With the aid of forty or fifty "Hansom" cabs the visitors were scattered to the four winds of Heaven in a drenching rain. Where they went to, none can tell. We took a sleeper on the Lake Shore at midnight, and arrived home Saturday noon, with a grip-sack full of relics and an empty purse.

MATRIMONIAL.

Another of Tecumseh's bachelors has joined the army of Benedicts. On Saturday last, July 13th, at Chicago, Mr. Oscar P. Bills of this village was united in marriage to Miss Isabelle Graves of Adrian. The bride is a daughter of Col. Wm. H. Graves, who commanded the 12th Mich. Infantry during the war. She has spent several years in Europe, is a lady of rare accomplishments, a fine linguist and a skilled musician. We all know the groom. The genial President of Bills's Bank needs no introduction to our readers. We believe he has chosen wisely, and we can heartily congratulate the bride upon her good luck. Mr. Bills has rather stolen a march on "ye editor" this time, for the quiet unobtrusive manner in which the affair was consummated leaves the reporter with nothing to say. The glitter and tinsel of a brilliant wedding were omitted. A simple ceremony in the presence of a few intimate friends, and the knot was tied. But the good words we offer are none the less sincere. To the companion of our boyhood, our old school mate, and business friend, we extend a cordial greeting and our heart's best wishes for his future health and happiness.

GONE TO REST.

Clyde T. Welling was born in this village, Aug. 6th, 1871. He early began to show intellectual qualities beyond his years and was a bright scholar in school, but his physical constitution was never strong. He was reared in his father's humble home under a fond mother's watchful care, and although only eighteen years old at his death, he had stamped the impress of a manly character upon the little circle in which he moved. He was ambitious beyond his strength and was hopeful that he might soon become a help mate in supporting his invalid father. Several weeks ago he was stricken with an attack of tuberculosis of the bowels. The attack was of so stubborn a character that his mother was much alarmed about him. Though he was better by spells, it never yielded fully to medical treatment, and his poor frail body gradually wasted away, until last Sunday morning, when his spirit sought its eternal rest. The funeral services were in charge of Beer's Post G. A. R. and the Woman's Relief Corps and were held at his father's residence last Monday afternoon. The Episcopal funeral service was recited by Rev. J. Phelps and the choir rendered appropriate vocal music. The casket was covered with beautiful floral offerings and sympathizing friends filled the house and grounds to show their esteem for Clyde's noble character and to mingle their tears with those of the bereaved friends. The circumstances surrounding his father's family render his death a peculiarly sad visitation. In every sense of that word, he was a noble son. Dutiful, industrious, temperate, kindhearted, he was his father's pride and his mother's joy. In this bereavement the father and mother can drink consolation alone from that fountain of boundless Love, which is able to bestow it. Clyde is not dead, but gone before.

Hereafter the City Band will give a street concert on Thursday evening, instead of Saturday—the weather permitting.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to express our sincere thanks to all the kind friends who gave so freely their aid and sympathy in our sad affliction.

The Knights Templar expect to give an exhibition drill at Tecumseh next week, and it is rumored that they will hold their encampment here before going to Washington.

Ellsworth Russell of Jackson was in town the first of the week. He has sold out his laundry business in that city and rumor says he will go into the drug business there.

A rumor was flying about the street yesterday that Mrs. H. W. Conkling had been hurt in a runaway. The facts are that Mr. Conkling's horse broke loose and ran away, breaking the buggy some, but there was no one in the buggy and no other damage was done.

Burglars entered the store of Dr. Begel, the postmaster at Holloway, last night, and succeeded in scattering the goods from one end of the store to the other. Nothing was taken, however, except one or two old watches, and a few pieces of clothing. Sheriff Baldwin was summoned by telephone, this morning, and went to the scene, but no clue can be discovered, and there the matter rests.—Adrian Times.

We learn that P. W. Adams Esq. has accepted the General Agency for the middle Atlantic States of the Page Woven Wire Fence. He will leave next week to attend his farms in Delaware and will soon have an office and headquarters for his agency in Philadelphia, Pa. We think Mr. Adams will be the right man, and the Page Co. is fortunate in securing his services. The Page wire fence, judging from the praise farmers are giving it and the amount they are using of it, seems to be the coming fence.

Misses Grace Heck and Mame Crowell have made the best boat record from Manitou Beach to Allen's dock, 3½ miles in 40 minutes, carrying 600 pounds. They use a linker boat and pull a very handsome stroke. Mr. John Heck challenged them last Monday with a silver piece and a dinner at Coe's. The worst offer he could make, as Harry Coe has made an enviable reputation in his father's hotel, and all good girls would pull a steady oar two miles to dine and chat with him. John says they beat him just four minutes. Goodness, how he rattled that gold watch.

Our community was greatly shocked yesterday evening, by a report over the local telegraph line from Adrian, that Dr. Stephenson's daughter had been killed in a runaway accident. We gather these few particulars of the sad affair from this morning's Free Press.

While Mrs. Robert Moreland and Miss Louise Stephenson were being driven through the city in a landau, the horse became frightened and ran and fearing it would not be controlled by the driver, Miss Stephenson jumped from the carriage and fell, striking her head upon a stone, near Roath & VanDoren's store. Her head was bruised and death ensued in a few moments. She is the eldest daughter of Dr. Robert Stephenson and a young lady universally esteemed for her high character. Her father was at the lake at the time, but Dr. Abe Stephenson, her brother, was present at her death. The city is in mourning over the sad event. Mrs. Moreland was not injured and the driver soon had the horse under control.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, JULY 1

BURKE IS THE MAN WANTED.

Young Carlson Arrives at Winnipeg and Instantly Identifies Him.

WINNIPEG, Man., July 10.—The Burke extradition case was continued again yesterday. Young Carlson arrived yesterday afternoon from Chicago, and gave his evidence. As soon as he entered the witness-box he identified Burke as the man Frank Williams, who had rented the Carlson cottage. Burke looked very sheepish, and a deep blush suffused his face when Carlson pointed to him and said: "That is Frank Williams." The prisoner also gulped several times as though he was choking.

Burke Pleads Not Guilty.

The prosecution rested their case with Carlson's evidence. No evidence was submitted on behalf of the prisoner. Last night the voluminous evidence was read to the prisoner, according to the statutes.

After the reading of the evidence the judge asked Burke the formal question if he had anything to say. Burke answered somewhat nervously: "Not guilty, my lord. I don't know anything about the matter." On advice of his counsel he refused to sign the statement.

Beggs in the Wrong Court.

CHICAGO, July 11.—Judge Tuley yesterday refused to issue a writ of habeas corpus for the release on bail of John F. Beggs. The judge held that, as an indictment has been found, application should be made to the criminal court, which alone has jurisdiction. Immediately after Judge Tuley had given his decision Beggs' attorney appeared before Judge Horton, of the criminal court, to file a motion that Beggs be admitted to bail. State Attorney Longenecker not being ready to argue the motion, Judge Horton suggested Friday morning at 10 o'clock as the hour for hearing the arguments, and this was agreed to by both sides.

CHICAGO, July 13.—The habeas corpus case of Lawyer John F. Beggs, to be permitted to give bail, was heard before Judge Horton, of the criminal court yesterday, and after listening to elaborate arguments of counsel pro and con the judge decided that Mr. Beggs must stay in jail pending his trial.

Burke To Be Extradited.

WINNIPEG, Man., July 11.—The arguments of counsel in the Burke case have been concluded and Judge Bain has given the order for extradition. The decision will be sent to Ottawa at once, where the minister of justice will undoubtedly issue the necessary papers. The only hope of Burke is in an appeal. His chances, however, are regarded as very small.

DIAMOND FIELD RECORDS.

The National League Gets to Work for the Pennant.

CHICAGO, July 9.—League scores on the base ball playing yesterday were as follows: At Washington City—Washington 4, Chicago 3; at Philadelphia—Philadelphia 11, Indianapolis 1; at Boston—Boston 6, Cleveland 1; at New York—New York 7, Pittsburg 5.

CHICAGO, July 10.—Following are the league base ball scores yesterday. At New York—New York 9, Pittsburg 0; at Washington—Washington 2, Chicago 10; at Boston—Boston 15, Cleveland 5; at Philadelphia—Philadelphia 10, Indianapolis 8.

CHICAGO, July 11.—The following record was made at base ball by National League clubs yesterday: At Boston—Boston 5, Cleveland 8; at New York—New York 14, Pittsburg 1; at Washington City—Washington 6, Chicago 4; at Philadelphia—Philadelphia 5, Indianapolis 3.

CHICAGO, July 12.—Yesterday's League base ball scores are given below: At New York—New York 9, Cleveland 1; at Washington City—Washington 3, Indianapolis 8; at Philadelphia—Philadelphia 9, Chicago 2; at Boston—Boston-Pittsburg postponed—rain.

CHICAGO, July 13.—The eastern clubs of the National Base Ball league are having picnics with the westerners this round. Yesterday's scores were: At Philadelphia—Philadelphia 3, Chicago 2; at Washington City—Washington 7, Indianapolis 2; at Boston—Boston 13, Pittsburg 1; at New York—New York 4, Cleveland 3.

Saturday's scores in the League were as follows: At Washington City—Washington 12, Indianapolis 7; at New York—New York 11, Cleveland 6—seven innings, rain; at Boston—Pittsburg 4, Boston 6. At Philadelphia, Anson, after one inning had been played, the home team getting one run, proceeded to bulldoze the umpire into postponing the game on account of alleged wet grounds. The umpire will be reported to President Young on charges of favoritism to Anson' "babies," as the grounds were in fair condition and the weather clearing.

A SETTLEMENT AT HOMESTEAD.

Result of a Conference Between the Strikers and Carnegie's Company.

PITTSBURG, July 15.—An armistice began between the strikers and Carnegie's managers at Homestead Saturday on the proposal of Sheriff McCandless that the company meet a committee of strikers and try to settle the dispute. The proposition was agreed to and two sessions of the joint committee were held, the last meeting closing at 8 p. m. yesterday. The conference ended in a satisfactory agreement to both sides, and full recognition to the Amalgamated association. The company receded from a good deal of its card of prices, and the men also made concessions, but on the whole the substantial victory is with the men. The reduction to the men will average about 23 per cent.; the highest, being 30 per cent, takes place in the 23, 33 and 119-inch mills. This reduction is mere child's play compared with that demanded by the firm, which in one particular case amounted to 75 per cent.

OUTLOOK IN THE WHEAT FIELDS.

It Seems Somewhat Problematical, as to Quantity, but the Quality Is Promising—The Harvest at Hand and the Yield Will Soon Be Known—Official Report on the Farm Production in Illinois—The Crop of Potatoes—Indiana's Harvest.

ST. PAUL, July 12.—Nearly every portion of the northwestern wheat belt has been visited with rain during the last ten days, the form of precipitation varying from light showers to heavy downpours. The result is an improvement in the appearance and prospects of the wheat crop all along the line, except where it was so thoroughly burned out by drought or so far advanced in growth as to be incapable of resuscitation. The rains have been mainly local in character, but the local areas were large. Some small sections have been missed, others are in need of still more moisture than they received, but, as stated, the net benefit to the crop has been very great.

Hot Weather Did Little Harm.

The hot weather of last week was confined mainly to southern Minnesota and southern Dakota, and even there did little if any harm, for it did not last long, and was followed by the refreshing rains and cool weather. In the northern section meantime the temperature was comparatively low and favorable to the growing grain. There were heavy dews at night also, and these were highly beneficial. In southern Minnesota and Dakota the wheat is fast approaching maturity, while the harvest of other small grains has been begun in scattered localities, and soon will be general.

Condition of Northern Wheat.

The northern wheat is now quite generally headed out, but is very uneven; the early sown being well advanced, while the second sowing on tracts that were blown out by the wind is at least a month behind the first sown, and the late sown wheat in general was kept back very much by the dry weather. This may be regarded as an unfavorable condition, for in some localities it applies to fields as well as to areas. The stalks are short, but are heading out in a most promising way, and crop sages are fond of remarking that in all previous years when the stem was short the yield was unexpectedly heavy. As to the quality of the season's wheat there is no question that, if favorable conditions continue until harvest time, it will be very far superior to last year's grain.

Situation in Minnesota.

The Minnesota wheat area is streaked and spotted like all other sections where wheat is grown; but the prospects now are that Minnesota will turn out a very fair crop. From several counties the report comes that the general crop yield will be larger than in any year since 1887. The southwestern section has suffered a good deal, but in that part of the state an improvement is noted since the rain. Corn in northern Minnesota has advanced rapidly, and the flax will be a heavy crop. Oats are likely to be a little short, though in some sections they promise a heavy yield.

THE CROPS IN ILLINOIS.

Report Issued by the State Board of Agriculture.

SPRINGFIELD, Ills., July 13.—The crop report issued by the state board of agriculture yesterday shows that the condition of meadows has not improved since May 1, and the present indications are that there will be less than 90 per cent. of an average yield per acre. The condition of pastures is nearly up to an average the state over, and in the northern portion better than usual at this time.

The Yield of Potatoes.

The area devoted to Irish potatoes this year is a fraction less than in 1888. The condition of the crop is excellent, and should nothing occur to injure the plants a full average yield per acre may be expected. In the northern part of the state the present indication is for more than an average yield in nearly all the counties. In the central part an average, or better yield, but in the southern portion the yield promises little more than an average.

Other Crops and Live Stock.

In the thirty counties from which reports on tobacco were received the area is 11 per cent. smaller than in 1888. The outlook is not promising for more than an average yield per acre. The area in Hungarian and millet for the state is but 96 per cent. as compared with a year ago. The condition of young live stock throughout the state is encouraging. The number of pigs in the state as compared with last year is 98 per cent., and the general condition is good. The number of lambs has decreased 7 per cent. There are more calves, but their condition is not as good as other young live stock. The number of colts foaled is a trifle less than for 1888.

RAISING TOO MUCH HAY.

Western Farmers Given Some Advice as to Its Quality.

FORT DODGE, Ia., July 13.—D. A. Kent, secretary of the Iowa Hay Shippers' association, has issued a circular to western hay raisers, in which he says that, according to all reports, there is a very heavy growth of timothy and prairie wherever these grasses are grown for the market. The New England and middle Atlantic states have very heavy crops of timothy, which will cut off eastern shipments for next year, and require the western crop to be consumed largely in the western markets.

The Kind to Put Up.

The advice of eastern receivers and consumers of hay to the hay men of the west to put up all they can is condemned, it being the obvious purpose to make hay cheap for the consumer by a large crop. If farmers and shippers will consult their best interests, instead of putting up a great gorge of hay, like the crop of last year, they will put up a few tons of first-class hay. There is more profit in ten tons of fancy hay than in thirty tons of poor grades.

Harvest in Indiana.

SEYMOUR, Ind., July 13.—Much of the wheat in this neighborhood is threshed. The yield is twenty-six to thirty-five bushels per acre and the quality of the grain is unusually good. Other crops are vigorous and promise large yields.

Left $50,000 to Harvard.

BOSTON, July 13.—The late George B. Hyde, of this city, left $50,000 to Harvard college and $50,000 for a town library at Southbridge.

A CABLE ROAD DISASTER.

The Grip Car Gets Loose and Kills a Passenger—Several Wounded.

CINCINNATI, July 15.—At 3:25 yesterday afternoon, cable cars No. 307 and 319 of the Vine Street Cable road, were going northward, heavily loaded, every seat being taken. When the cars reached the power house, the grip man left the cars and Conductor Goodman took his place. After leaving the power house, the speed of the cars was increased, it being down grade, the grip loosened and the cable was dropped; shooting ahead the momentum increased every moment by the grade and heavy load of passengers until a speed of eighteen miles an hour were reached.

A Panic on the Cars.

When Eichler's garden, a pleasure resort, was reached, a passenger requested the conductor to stop the cars. In an instant the brake chain broke and fell on the rapidly revolving front axle, becoming fastened to it. The flooring of the cars was knocked out, and a panic ensued, everybody yelling "jump!" which the passengers did, and were tossed in every direction, stunned and dazed.

The Casualty List.

After the cars were stopped it was learned that the following were killed and injured: Killed—Mrs. William Telgate, of 612 Race street, neck broken and skull fractured. Injured—Mrs. S Keller, 488 Walnut street, severe contusions about the head and body; Thomas F. Conber, Newport, Ky., left arm broken, cut on chin, and contusion; unknown young woman, eye gouged out and bruises on head and body.

INDIGNATION AT JOHNSTOWN.

It Finds Expression in Resolutions Adopted at a Meeting.

JOHNSTOWN, Pa., July 15.—The indignation meeting Saturday afternoon was largely attended. Speeches were made Col. Linton, W. H. Rose, C. L. Dick, Hon. J. U. Rose, Burgess Horrell, Rev. D. J. Beale, A. J. Hawes, and many others, all denouncing the management of affairs under Governor Beaver's commission. Resolutions were adopted to the effect that the funds have been wasted; that they should be immediately distributed, and that by a committee of Conemaugh valley people instead of outsiders, and that the appointment of such committee of outsiders is an insult to the residents; that Governor Beaver's statement that $1,500,000 has already been expended in the valley is not true, as only by the grossest extravagance could such a sum have been expended. Charges are made that any other course than the one outlined above savors of "jobs," and complaint is made in two places that an oath is exacted of applicants for relief as to their private income and requirements; custodians of the fund are appealed to to send what they have to the local committee, and thanks are voted to the thousands of people who have subscribed to the relief money.

Another Body Found.

The body of Mrs. Mary A. Swineford, of St. Louis, one of the passengers on the day express, was recovered Saturday and buried. It was identified by a gold watch and other valuables and was very well preserved, having been buried in the sand above the stone railroad bridge.

GAVE UP THE ENCAMPMENT.

No Grand Meeting of G. A. R. Men at Milwaukee—The Railwayys Obstinate.

CHICAGO, July 11.—A committee of the G. A. R., after unsuccessful efforts yesterday to secure from the Central Traffic association a promise of a cent-a-mile rate for members desirous of attending the Milwaukee reunion of soldiers and sailors, instructed Gen. Martin, department commander of Illinois, to issue an order directing the department commanders of the various states to inform all Grand Army posts that the proposed grand encampment had been abandoned. Accommodations will be provided for none but the delegates to the annual business meeting. This step was not decided upon until the last moment, and may be considered as final, unless the railroad sconcede the point demanded by the soldiers.

The Grand Army Encampment.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 13.—Commander-in-Chief Warner, of the Grand Army of the Republic, telegraphs to the Grand Army of the Republic headquarters here that he will not discourage a large attendance of comrades at the Milwaukee encampment, notwithstanding the refusal of the railroads to grant the 1 cent a mile rate.

Frightful Domestic Tragedy.

BOSTON, Mass., July 15.—At Somerville Saturday morning the people were shocked by the occurrence of a dreadful domestic slaughter. Mrs. Catharine Smith has been living with Augustus Rosenberg, although not believed to have been married. About 1 a. m. Saturday Rosenberg began the work. He first shot Mrs. Smith dead, then her son Thomas, aged 14, and then two other children, one of who will die. While attempting to escape the murderer fell on a spike, which penetrated his brain and killed him. He is believed to have been insane.

An efficient yet mild detergent without any of the objectionable properties of ordinary soaps, is what recommends the "IVORY" to intelligent and discriminating people. Its cheapness brings it within the reach of every one.

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Apparently with prophetic vision the state board of auditors had the desks at the capitol screwed fast to the floor prior to the assembling of the late legislature, and that's doubtless the reason why they are still in Lansing. The movable articles that weren't lugged off by the law-makers are few and very far between.

L. S. Lovell, an Ionia farmer, was probably the first man in the state to harvest his rye. But the crop didn't enrich him to any perceptible extent, as 'twas cut by the army worm.

A Port Huron gentleman of color was arrested for disrespectful treatment of two women, and six hours later was on his way to perm a ninety days' job for the state at the house of correction. When Port Huron justice scents the black track it seems to be unusually fleet footed.

A fire in the Everett house at Saginaw brought forth a company of people that were scantily clad, most of 'em displaying naught but ghostly apparel. The loss to the hotel and the clothing establishment located on the first floor was about $30,000; fully insured.

J. P. Campbell, a Clinton county ruralist, had several more teeth and a far better stock of good looks a week ago than at present. An animated "discoossion" with an enraged bull accounts for the difference.

Getting married and selling firewater aren't the only occupations that require the procurement of a license, as a Frankfort merchant found to his sorrow by selling oleomargarine without first consulting the proper legal authorities.

Rev. Dr. Davies, of Philadelphia, has accepted the position of bishop of Michigan, tendered him by the Bay City conference some weeks since.

Gen. Alger's trip to Alaska seems to have been devised for a more substantial purpose than the planting of a presidential boom. A business like that of the seal fisheries that's good for a $5,000,000 income, is worth looking after by any man, especially if he's a presidential possibility.

Orville Manchester, aged 12, and Walter Singer, aged 13, and another lad, all of Standish, all concluded to take a bath in a pond in the woods where they were hunting cows near their home. Walter and Orville were both drowned and their companion was left to return to their home and tell the sad story.

There seems to be no end to the jokes and canards justly earned and due to the old maid and old bachelor. Up at Cadillac the other day some young fellows put a dummy in the bed of an old bachelor, at the same time placing a pair of ladies' shoes on the floor and a dress upon a chair. Upon entering the room the said o. b. retired in the same skittish manner that had kept him a bachelor for lo these many years and passed the night in a much less comfortable room, not finding out the hoax until morning.

Rev. S. H. Woodford, of Trinity church, Grand Rapids, became ine and being possessed, naturally, of a violent temper, smashed the glass doors and nearly the owner's head of a neighbor's house where his wife was visiting.

A 16-year-old girl by the name of Nellie Hopkins, living at 45 Myrtle street, Grand Rapids, ended her young life by cutting her throat with a razor. A weakened mind caused by habitual epilepsy was the cause.

John Golden, a Bay City justice of the peace of the peace, thinks he has broken the record by marrying a couple in just forty-eight seconds.

The Detroit Sunday News says that while workmen were removing some stone from the First National bank in that city one was found which had a part of the profile of an Indian's head very plainly outlined upon the slab. This portion of the stone differed from the other only by reason of its being lighter colored.

The skeleton of Joseph McDonald, the wealthy saw-mill owner of Akron, who disappeared so mysteriously some time ago, was found in the swamp near that place recently. It is supposed he was murdered for his money and the body concealed in the swamp.

Samuel Rice, of Ubly, got his clothing mixed up with some machinery in his carding mill, and but for the breaking of a belt would not be alive to tell the story of his narrow escape.

Maurice Wheeler, a 9-year-old boy fell into the Soo rapids at Sault Ste. Marie the other day and would have been drowned but for the rare presence of mind displayed by Clifton Callard, aged 13, who promptly jumped in after him and succeeded in holding him till help came. Of course Clifton is now being made the hero of the day.

Horr Scores the Place.

EAST SAGINAW, Mich., July 15.—Roswell G. Horr, named Wednesday for the consulate at Valparaiso, returned Friday evening from the east. He absolutely refuses to accept the appointment. He regards the matter as an insult, believing his services to the party worth more than a place of no more consequence than the consulate in question.

TO STOP THE FARCE.

Happy-Go-Lucky Swearing in the New York Custom House.

NEW YORK, July 18.—In the estimation of Collector Erhardt there is too much happy-go-lucky swearing in the custom house. Little chaps ply through the departments most of the day, swearing in their employer's interests to all sorts of documents. Often they haven't the remotest idea of what they are swearing to. Col. Erhardt says that this is a farce and must be stopped. He began on a little fellow from Seabury's office Friday. The colonel sent the following letter to Mr. Seabury:

Knew Nothing About the Contents.

"A shipper's manifest, brought to this office by a little boy who informs me that he was requested to verify the same under oath, is hereby returned. He knew nothing about the contents of the paper and was not permitted to take the oath. Probably one of your clerks sent him on this errand. I know of no worse training that could be given a lad than to teach him that the taking of an oath is purely a formal matter. False swearing or subornation thereof is as heinous an offense, when committed in the customs service, as the same is when committed in a court of justice. Hereafter the principals or responsible people representing them will have to do the swearing."

DAVITT GROWS EXCITED.

Some One Trying to Injure the Irish in the Eyes of the Public.

LONDON, July 10.—Before the Parnell commission Wednesday Michael Davitt complained that somebody desiring to injure the Irish in the eyes of the public had placed two bogus dynamite machines within the precincts of the court, whereupon The Evening Post, in a sensational article, had indicated the danger which the court incurred, and pointed out how easily the desperate enemies of England, who had recently testified before the commission, could destroy the building with dynamite. Mr. Davitt spoke excitedly and with much vehemence, asserting at the conclusion of his remarks that the affair had been planned by Houston and Le Caron with the intention of discrediting the Irish and bolstering up the tottering case of The Times. Presiding Justice Hadden said he understood and appreciated Mr. Davitt's strong feeling in the matter, but he must take the proper course, make inquiries and prove his allegations before putting them forth. He himself regarded the matter as a silly hoax.

To Call a Halt on England.

NEW YORK, July 13.—Rossa and his friends are going to call a halt on England once more, they say. A call has been issued to all Irish revolutionists for a convention in Philadelphia in August. The call is issued by Michael O'Sullivan, John Condon, John Turney, "Rocky Mountain" O'Brien, Peter Ryan, Joseph P. Kelly, "Tom Byrne," William Burke, El O'Donnell, Pat O'Connor, and O'Donovan Rossa. This is part of the call:

We ask, Are you true to your pledges and to your instinct that it is by the sword alone that Irish freedom can be won? If to that doctrine you still adhere, we ask your co-operation along the true path in the old cause, the only road that will lead Ireland to freedom—the road where brave men have to encounter fight and force and peril.

Rossa says the convention will try to find out whether Irishmen have not had enough of Parnell.

Death of a Prominent Editor.

GALENA, Ills., July 10.—The death of Capt. H. D. Farquharson, of Boscobel, Wis., which occurred Monday, closes the career of one of the most prominent editors in the northwest. He was a native of Rome, N. Y., came west when a young man, was foreman in the office of The Dubuque (Iowa) Herald, and also of The Grant County (Wisconsin) Herald at Lancaster. He served in the war as captain of Company C, Twenty-fifth Wisconsin infantry. After the war he was proprietor of The Boscobel (Wis.) Dial. At the time of his death he was one of the game wardens of Wisconsin.

A Short Railway Strike.

ALBANY, N. Y., July 10.—For refusing to take out a train during the tie-up on the New York Central last fall, about which nothing was said at the time, a freight conductor was discharged Monday of last week, being told that he was a "rebel" to the company. He appealed to the local union of railway employes and they ordered a strike at 12 o'clock Monday night. Just after 11 o'clock a telegram was received from headquarters to reinstate the freight conductor, averting a strike that would probably have involved the whole railway.

A Ruined City.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 9.—At Bakersfield, county seat of Kern county and one of the most thriving cities in lower San Joaquin valley, fire wiped out Sunday every business house in the town and fifty residences. All hotels, banks, express offices, newspaper offices and stores are gone.

Those Who Dance, Etc.

NEW YORK, July 10.—It was reported Tuesday that John L. Macauley, one of the best known men in Wall street, had paid to a Miss Ida Brown $150,000 in cash rather than face a lawsuit, and had received from Miss Brown a release of all claims. Mr. Macauley is worth $3,500,000 and has an office at 36 Wall street. He is largely interested in the New England Terminal company. Miss Brown has figured conspicuously as his wife for some time.

Almost a Victim to Her Hair.

Rage of the Elements

An Ohio Town Swept Out of Existence.

DESOLATED BY A WHIRLING WIND.

Fifty People Reported Sent to Eternity, but No Details Accessible—The Dam Lends Its Aid to the Destructive Water-Spout—Four Persons Lose Their Lives and a Great Amount of Property Wiped Out—Fatal Cloud-Burst in Nebraska.

CINCINNATI, July 15.—The village of Princeton was almost wiped out by a tornado yesterday afternoon, and it is reported that fifty people were killed. Not a house escaped damage, and some of them were blown entirely away. Every house was more or less wrecked, and several of them entirely destroyed. In some instances not a trace was left of the structure that had stood on the spot. The news was brought to Hamilton by persons sent for assistance, but who were unable to give any idea of the loss of life or property.

There were some twenty or more dwellings in Princeton, which had a population of 200.

SWEPT AWAY TWO DAMS.

A Wall of Water Twenty Feet High Works Death and Desolation.

BALTIMORE, July 15.—A water-spout caused the small streams known as Herring run and Moore's run, half a dozen miles northeast of Baltimore, to rise to an unprecedented height Saturday afternoon, bursting two dams, one called Reed's dam and the other at Casper Bobb's place on Bellaire road. The water rushed down in a wall twenty feet deep, sweeping everything before it. Several people were drowned. Their names as far as known are two men on Bellaire road named Powell and Scheillner, drowned in Herring run and George Lingenfelder, his wife and father. Mr. Lingenfelder was coming to market at Baltimore, and tried to cross the bridge from which he was swept.

Devastated the Valley.

Horses and cattle were drowned in large numbers, and property and crops were swept away. It is reported that there is a scene of desolation and ruin along the stream named. The damage done cannot be fully estimated, but may run up in the hundreds of thousands. Nearly every bridge crossing Herring run was swept away, including the fine large iron bridge at Bobb's. Fields of grain were destroyed and trucking farms ruined. The roads are all wiped out. The tracks of the Falls Springs horse railway were twisted and turned into utter ruin. A large country store on Harford road was swept away. There was a washout on the Maryland Central railroad at Guilford station, causing a suspension of travel.

Carried Through a Sewer.

PITTSBURG, Pa., July 15.—At 2 o'clock yesterday morning the mud bank over the well of the Soho street sewer gave way and five workmen who were trying to loosen a mass of debris from below, were caught in the rush of mud and water and carried hundreds of feet through the main sewer into the valley below. William Daily was found dead near the mouth of the sewer, with two coils of fire house hose about his neck. Andrew N. McGregor died at 8 o'clock in the morning. Robert Munn, foreman, was seriously injured. William McClay and Joseph McCarthy were terribly bruised.

Fatal Cloud Burst in Nebraska.

FORT ROBINSON, Neb., July 15.—A cloud burst occurred on Soldier Creek valley about daylight Saturday. Four people—Marsh Duncan and three of his children—are known to have been drowned. It is feared that many other lives have been lost. Col. Tilford sent out a company of the Eighth infantry to search for the dead bodies and carry assistance to the sufferers.

RAIN WATER AND ACID.

Samples of Vinegar Sold in Indianapolis and Other Cities.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 13.—Acting under the provisions of a recent law the secretary of the state board of health has collected samples of the vinegar sold in this and other Indiana cities, and has just completed a careful analysis. Of eight samples thoroughly tested but one proves to be pure cider vinegar, and the other seven are nothing more than a decoction of rain water and sulphuric acid. The largest vinegar manufactory in this city, which claims to sell pure apple vinegar, furnished the worst stuff that was found among the samples. The secretary says that it will destroy the stomach even of an ostrich if used liberally. The law as enacted by the last legislature prohibits the manufacture and sale of any vinegar not the product of pure apple juice. It must not have any artificial coloring; must have an acidity equivalent to the presence of not less than 4 per cent. by weight of absolute acetic acid.

Gravel Trains Collide.

PITTSBURG, Pa., July 11.—A collision of gravel and coal trains on the Pittsburg and Castle Shannon road occurred near High Bridge, four miles from this city, at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon. Thirteen cars were wrecked and six persons injured. William Kunkle, a blacksmith, was caught in the wreck and terribly scalded by the bursting of the cylinder. His body was crushed, and he is thought to be fatally hurt.

Secured Julian Hawthorne's Services.

NEW YORK, July 13.—The Scripps league of newspapers, composed of The Detroit News, The Cincinnati Post, The St. Louis Chronicle and The Cleveland Press, has engaged the services of Mr. Julian Hawthorne as a descriptive writer in connection with the expedition of workingmen that the league has sent to Paris to visit the exposition.

Seismic Disturbances in California.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 13.—The territory around Los Olivos, San Luis Obispo county, county, has been shaken by earthquakes during the last few days. Sunday there were six distinct shocks. The severest shock occurred at 3 o'clock yesterday morning. The people are becoming alarmed at the long continued disturbances.

A Small Pox-Stricken Family.

FERGUS FALLS, Minn., July 13.—Three cases of small-pox were found yesterday in a family residing six miles south of Barnesville. They were at once quarantined. They are recent arrivals there. General vaccination has been recommended by the physicians.

Postoffice Inspector Appointed.

WASHINGTON CITY, July 15.—The postmaster general Saturday appointed as a postoffice inspector Charles L. Dunbar, of Michigan.

DETROIT SUMMER TROTTING MEETING

The people of Michigan love trotters and trotting contests and it is remarkable that Michigan has encouraged trotting contests, and almost every town of note in it has its trotting track and gives during the year one or more trotting meetings which are largely attended and greatly interest the people. Detroit is the Metropolis and its name and fame has gone abroad in the land and it is known in every nook and corner of the nation on account of its famous trotting meetings. These annual events are the pride of the breeders and horse-loving citizens of the State, and the week of the great Blue Ribbon Meeting is a week set apart for recreation and pleasure. These summer meetings have scarce a rival, and certainly no superior. This is attributable to the large amount of cash offered for purses and stakes by the Detroit Driving Club.—and giving its meeting at such a date as to catch the horses which have been trotting both in the East and West. But the main reason of the popularity of the Detroit meeting is the fact that the whole endeavor of the management is to conduct its meetings on a board and liberal scale, to do exact and even-handed justice to all horsemen, and to afford the people who attend the races an entertainment which will give them pleasure and satisfaction. The meeting begins Tuesday, July 23rd, and continues 4 days. The opening day will be called Blue Ribbon day, and the management have decided to make no charge for admission. On the 3rd day the great $10,000 stake race takes place in 2:24 class, when some of the great flyers will show up. Budd Doble and his string of 23 fine animals will be there, and the great pacer Johnston who will try to beat his record. Reduced rates on all railroads. Our race loving citizens should not miss the opportunity to attend the great Blue Ribbon meeting at Detroit.

BEAUTY, RICH AND RARE.

THE MAGNIFICENT ART EXHIBITION NOW PREPARING

For the People of Michigan—Michigan Art and Artists—Some of the Most Famous Paintings in the World Coming to This State.

The people of Michigan have advanced wonderfully in art education within the last twenty-five years. Still a great body are lamentably deficient, large masses not yet having advanced beyond the chromo stage. Nevertheless Michigan may now proudly boast of having produced the most distinctively American artist of world-wide reputation, in the person of F. S. Church, and a score or more of artists of considerable fame. Twenty-five years ago there were hardly any purchasers of really good paintings to be found in the state. Now there are a number of private collections, some of them containing pictures famous both in Europe and America, while humble but still meritorious collections may be counted by dozens, and single paintings of a fair grade are scattered all over the state. In short true art is both appreciated and paid for in Michigan by a rapidly increasing body of the people.

MICHIGAN ART GALLERIES.

There are but two public art galleries of note in the state. The first of these is the H. C. Lewis art gallery, at Coldwater. Mr. Lewis was the first wealthy gentleman in the State to begin a really fine art collection. About a quarter of a century ago he had his plans well laid. His collection embraces pictures from most of the best American artists, and is worth a fortune. His will gives the gallery to the University of Ann Arbor whenever his wife dies, and is a fine example of liberal public spirit. The Detroit Museum of Art is the other public gallery. Its collection is an excellent one for a progressive school of art, though the Museum has not yet acquired the ownership of many famous pictures, but it has a number of famous pictures loaned to its use and on exhibition.

PRIVATE COLLECTIONS.

There are a number of excellent private art collections in the state, some of them containing works of rare value, and all possessing undeniable merit. Among these are the well-known collections of Gen. R. A. Alger, Senator James McMillan, M. S. Smith, D. M. Ferry, Bela Hubbard, H. S. Pingree, U. S. Minister to Spain Thos. W. Palmer, F. J. Hecker, David Whitney, jr., George S. Davis, C. F. Freer (who has the best and largest collection of etchings in the United States), and the Detroit Club, in Detroit; Senator Stockbridge, Kalamazoo, Col. George C. Briggs, Grand Rapids, R. G. Peters, Maristee, ex Governor David H. Jerome, Saginaw and C. H. Hackley, Muskegon.

MICHIGAN ARTISTS.

Michigan has produced a number of famous artists, and contains many of large present promise. One of the pioneers in fame was J. M. Stanley (deceased) who became the most noted delineator of Indians and Indian scenes. Robert Hopkin, fine marine painter, was among the early Michigan artists. Among others who achieved early reputation were J. M. Hartig, of Grand Rapids, Hurley Moore, Kalamazoo, Alvah Bradish, L. T. Ives, W. B. Conely, Mortimer L. Smith, and J. K. Trego, Detroit.

Among the famous Michigan artists of today, Randolph Rogers, the sculptor, of Ann Arbor, Fred. S. Church and Larry Earle, Grand Rapids, Gari J. Melchers, Julius Rolshoven and Robert Gies, Detroit, are conspicuous. Mr. Melchers has the medals of the Paris and Amsterdam salons, and Mr. Rolshoven the Paris salon medal. Mr. Gies has sold a small pastelle for a high price to L'Art, the best art magazine in the world.

Among our promising artists are: Robert Wickenden, W. T. Trego (now pupil of Messonier, Paris), Robert J. Sprunk, F. P. Paulus, Percy Ives, Arthur J. Goodman, H. S. Bullock, C. E. Hulburt, Detroit, and Will Howe, Grand Rapids (pupil of Von Marke, the famous cattle painter. One of Mr. Howe's cattle pieces was purchased by the French government, and was given a medal in the salon), and John Owen (water colors).

MICHIGAN LADY ARTISTS.

Michigan has several women who give promise of good art work. Among them are Miss Helen Roby (now in Paris), Miss Carol M. Albright (teacher in New York), Misses Goulson, sisters, Miss Kate Allmond, Miss Florence Waterman (formerly of Grand Rapids).

Mr. A. J. Brow, art dealer, Detroit, first brought out the Stanley Indian paintings in chromo, and made them familiar to the people. He has always been a memoer of the hanging committees at art exhibitions, and has done much to promote public interest and education in art.

MAGNIFICENT ART SHOW.

The great International Exposition, to be held in Detroit in September, is now constructing an immense Art Gallery, to be lighted and hung in the best modern methods, in which will be placed the largest, costliest and finest art exhibition ever shown to the American public. It will draw the rarest art treasures from the galleries and collections mentioned above, and will also import at a great expense the largest and most famous collection ever gathered in the United States, and never before shown to the American public. This is the celebrated American Art Fund collection of the best works by two hundred of the best American artists in Europe, comprising about three hundred and fifty pictures of rare merit, of which about fifty are fresh from the latest Paris salon. Among the famous artists represented in this collection are Church, the Morans, Hamilton, Poore, Chase, Thorne, J. G. Brown, Brush, Walker, Pauli, Brooks, Payton and Core. One of the pictures is a remarkable landscape by Pauli, selected for a medal, and Poore's wonderful prize picture,

THE NIGHT OF THE NATIVITY,

which has created a sensation among the artists and critics of Europe and America. The Exhibition will also include the world-famous Last Hours of Mozart, owned by Gen. Alger. One of the rarest and richest exhibits will be Makoffski's famous great painting,

THE RUSSIAN WEDDING FEAST,

never before exhibited in the United States, and secured for the great Michigan International Exposition at a cost of about five hundred dollars a day for each day it will remain on show. There will also be a profusion of famous statuary and other art works.

This Art Exhibition cannot fail not only to attract the people of Michigan by thousands, but it will be of wide and permanent benefit as a school of popular education in art, filling the eye and the mind with rich object lessons of beauty and cultivated taste in both form and color.

Without prejudices, but with strong principles, liberal in its views, uncompromising in opposition to fraud and injustice, it aims to teach the soundest elements of good government; to point out errors and correct wrongs; to applaud the good and stamp out the evil; to do its whole duty by the people. With all this it gives a complete original novel by a great author in each issue, the strongest short stories and the most timely essays and articles, information upon all subjects, sincere exposition of political questions, current dramatic events, reviews, poems, etc.

It is a magazine for democrats, because it believes that honest democratic principles, honestly applied, will best serve the needs of the people. The readers of the HERALD will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucus surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength, by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials. Address, Remarkable Nerve.

The early history of America is full of instances of men having great nerve. But we are rapidly becoming the most nervous people on earth. The recent increase of insanity, epileptic fits, headache, backache, neuralgia, sleeplessness, nervousness, dyspepsia, fluttering of the heart, etc., points to an early decay of the race, unless this tendency is checked. Nothing will cure these diseases like Dr. Miles' Nervine, warranted to contain neither opium nor morphine. Sample bottles free at Baker & Hall's Drug Store. Don't fail to try it.

STRANGE RESURRECTION

OF ANCIENT MOUND BUILDERS AND INDIAN WARRIORS

Exhumed in Digging the Foundations for the International Exposition Buildings in Detroit—Curious and Interesting Facts About Prehistoric Races and Their Works.

In making excavations for the foundations for the buildings for the great Detroit International Exposition, the workmen, a few days ago, unearthed a large number of skeletons. There were nearly 100 skulls and skeletons exhumed, with specimens of pottery, fragments of arms of stone and metal, and other relics. These skeletons seem to have been deposited together in a pit, and then covered with earth. As the place is known to have been used for burial places by the Indians for many generations, it is more than probable that there are hundreds more of like remains in the vicinity. There is a grim fitness in the fact that so great an enterprise as the International Exposition causes an upheaval among the oldest inhabitants, alike among the living and the dead, as it to anything they ever knew or dreamed of. This find may make a valuable and interesting collection, with additions from other sources, to an archæological exhibit of Indian and prehistoric relics and antiquities at the Exposition.

Michigan is rich in traces of the ancient Mound Builders—a race that preceded by unknown centuries of time the Indians found here upon the advent of the white man. That prehistoric race worked the copper mines of the upper peninsula, wove cloth, manufactured pottery, made weapons of copper, carried on a wide commerce, and constructed earthwork fortifications and burial and other mounds.

A HUGE BURIAL MOUND

700 to 800 feet long, 300 to 400 feet wide and forty to fifty feet high was a conspicuous object near the site now occupied by the Exposition building. Most of the vast tumulus has disappeared before the plow and spade. It contained thousands upon thousands of skeletons that had been buried in heaps. For generations it was the practice of the Indians of Michigan and parts of Canada to bring many canoe loads of skeletons, at stated periods, to this great mound, and inter them together in shallow pits that were afterward covered with earth. Besides there were many single burials of chiefs and noted warriors.

This mound was originally constructed by a race preceding the Indians, traces of whose remains have been found in great abundance at a greater depth than the Indian relics. There is no doubt that the earlier occupants of the great mound burned the bones of their dead in heaps and perhaps the flesh also, thus constituting the

FIRST DETROIT CREMATION.

There were various other mounds and relics near by. Not far above, on the banks of the Detroit river, was a group of mounds, from which many bones and relics have been taken, including arrow and spear heads of stone, copper needles and other implements, pottery, shells, beads, etc. In 1870 fourteen bodies were disinterred near Fort Wayne, with an earthen crock at the head of each. In excavating the foundations for the Twenty-fourth street police station a number of skulls and parts of skeletons were uncovered. Below Fort Wayne was formerly an oval embankment or of low earthworks, inclosing about an acre and a half of land. It had a ditch, eight feet wide, partly outside and partly inside its low walls, and a gateway fifty feet wide on the river front. There was a marsh all around, except a narrow neck connecting with the higher land. This neck showed traces of being protected by parallel embankments.

The remains found in the Detroit mounds are of singular value. They show skulls of the lower strata, that, even to the uneducated eye, appear to belong to different races. Some of the remains show a race of stature much below that of the average Indian, and skulls with such low and receding fronts as indicate an intelligence but little above brutes, belonging to the lowest order of savagery. Among the most curious remains are so-called because each one has a hole cut in it of an inch and a half to two inches in diameter, evidently by some sharp stone or metal tool. But the piece of bone thus cut out was carefully replaced before burial. Conjecture is at a loss to account for this.

It may have been to remove the brain; or it may have been to open a door for the spirit to leave the body, as the Indians were advanced enough in civilization to know that the brain was the seat of knowledge, or the residence of the spirit, and these perforated skulls are comparatively modern and Indian, although prior to the advent of the whites. The Detroit mounds also raise the important question whether the Indians, or their prehistoric predecessors, were acquainted with iron, some traces that seem to indicate where iron has disappeared being found in the mounds. It is said that traces of iron have not been discovered in the known to be ancient graves of the mounds in any other state.

ALL OVER THE STATE

are curious traces of a vanished race. Burial mounds are found in many places, the most notable being near Grand Rapids and Detroit. There was formerly a stone mound on the island of Mackinac. Earthwork fortifications, enclosing springs or supplied with water by ditches, existed on the Clinton river in Macomb county, with burial mounds near it; upon a small lake in Gilead, Branch county; near Prairie Ronde; near Marshall; several on the Kalamazoo river; a very large work near Three Rivers, St. Joseph county; on Climax prairie, and in other places. Some of these prehistoric forts were square; some a line of breastworks across a point of land; but most were circular or oval. Perhaps the most curious of all the remains of a prehistoric people are the

ANCIENT GARDEN BEDS

found in the counties of St. Joseph, Cass, and Kalamazoo; at Three Rivers, Schoolcraft, Kalamazoo, Prairie Ronde, Galesburg, Gilead, etc. In these places the ground was regularly platted into what seemed to be raised garden beds of regular forms, with sunken walks between, and the earth showing supposed evidences of having been at some time in the remote past annually cultivated. These garden beds covered large spaces—300 acres in one instance—and were not the work of Indians, who did not have even a tradition to account for them, and who were not an agricultural people.

Perhaps the prehistoric race who created these strange garden beds may have had, in their long-forgotten age, their great International Fair and Exposition. Who knows?

A complete full-sized novel by the best and most popular authors in every issue. 12 unabridged standard works of fiction in a year. A complete library of fiction and storehouse of original literature, besides over 1800 pages of short stories, sketches, essays, reviews, poems and passing events.

Belford's Magazine is not an experiment. Seizing a vacant place in American literature, it has arisen at once to the highest position, and now stands the rival of the most popular, best edited, and most costly magazines published in this country. Without prejudices, but with strong principles, liberal in its views, uncompromising in opposition to fraud and injustice, it aims to teach the sound est elements of good government; to point out errors and correct wrongs; to applaud the good and stamp out the evil; to do its whole duty by the people. With all this it gives a complete original novel by a great author in each issue, the strongest short stories and the most timely essays and articles, information upon all subjects, sincere exposition of political questions, current dramatic events, reviews, poems, etc.

It is a magazine for democrats, because it believes that honest democratic principles, honestly applied, will best serve the needs of the people. It is a magazine for republicans, because it upholds good government, clean records and honest administration, aside from party prejudices, and because every truth-seeking republican should study the aims, tenets and acts of the opposite party as exhibited in a journal known to the above political falsehood or evasion. It is a magazine for the library of the man of leisure, the table of the planter, the fireside of the farmer. It is a magazine for every intelligent reader who takes an interest in good literature, strong fiction and clever essays. Send six cents for sample copy of $2.50 per year—25 cents a number.

MISS STEPHENSON'S DEATH.

The following additional particulars in regard to the terrible accident, resulting in the death of Miss Louise Stephenson, are taken from the Adrian Times of last Thursday.—Mrs. Robert Moreland and Miss Louise Stephenson had been indulging in a pleasant evening ride in the handsome Victoria belonging to Mr. James Moreland, and as they were going west on Church street, near the corner of winter, the horse, which is a young and powerful animal, suddenly became frigthened at something, and started on a dead run around the corner on Winter street, and went charging down that throughfare, swinging the carriage from one side to the other as he went.

As they reached W. A. Stow's carriage factory, the animal swung the vehicle in towards the building, and just at this instant Miss Stephenson leaped out on the right side.

In some way her dress must have struck the mud guard of the carriage, and she was thrown violently to the hard ground, bounding several feet before she stopped.

Mr. B. F. Graham, who was standing in front of Howard Sickles's livery stable and saw the whole of the frightful affair, ran immediately and picked up her lifeless body, and with the assistance of Michael Bain, carried her into the residence of Mr. Thomas Gorman, just across the street.

Blood was streaming from her nose and mouth, and a horrible gash covered several inches back of the right ear.

Dr. Jewett, who was near by shortly after the accident, was hurried into the house, but could be of no service. He states that there were no evidences of life when he reached her, except the faintest flutter of her heart, which soon ceased. He does not think she breathed after she struck the ground.

Parties who saw the accident, say that Miss Stephenson struck the ground with her feet first, and then was dragged or thrown several feet. She had a terriable cut on the base of the brain under the right ear, which, undoubtedly was the cause of death, by brain concussion. She had a severe contusion, also, just above the right eye.

Dr. A. M. Stephenson and Mr. Ed Stephenson, the only members of the family in the city, were summoned, and the remains were removed in a carriage to the residence on North Main street.

The father, Dr. Robert Stephenson, was enjoying a rest at Sand Lake, and was summoned by telephone, the message leaving him to infer that his daughter was seriously injured. Before he arrived in the city, however, he was met by Messrs. H. V. C. Hart and W. H. Crane, and the sad intelligence conveyed to him in as easy a manner as possible. He arrived home in just one hour and twenty minutes from the time he started.

Miss Laura Louise Stephenson was the oldest daughter of Dr. Robt. Stephenson, and has lived in Adrian all her lifetime. She was an active member of the Presbyterian church, and a hard worker in the church circle. At the death of her mother, nearly three years ago, she was elected to fill that lady's place on the Board of Directors of the Ladies' Library Association, of which her mother was one of the founders. Louise has acted as Librarian of that Association, and has always been an active member, taking part in all its deliberations, and evincing a spirit of enthusiasm in its progress and welfare. She has been the comfort and light of the venerable doctor in his declining years, and as a young lady of rare attainments and sweet and loving disposition. She was very domestic in her tastes, looking after the comforts of the household since the mother's death with a careful hand, and an eye single to the happiness of those about her.

TECUMSEH, THURSDAY, JULY 2

POLITICS IN INDIANA.

Reorganization of the Republican State Central Committee.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 20.—A larger number of the Republican politicians of Indiana have never been brought together at a meeting of the state central committee than at the meeting here Friday night, when the committee was reorganized. The unusual interest manifested is explained by the frequently expressed desire to carry the state at the next election so that a Republican may be sent to the United States senate as the successor of Voorhees, and a desperate fight will certainly be made with that object in view.

Michener Succeeds Huston.

Although many persons were proposed for the executive positions on the committee, the contest settled down Friday night to but one position, and that was the secretaryship. Louis T. Michener, attorney general of Indiana, and about the most successful politician who has come to the front in the state in recent years, was unanimously chosen chairman to succeed United States Treasurer Huston, and Marcus R. Sulzer, of Madison, was made vice-chairman. There were three candidates for secretary, but Frank M. Milligan, of Newcastle, was elected on the first ballot, and Joseph I. Irwin, a Columbus banker, was chosen treasurer. The new chairman stated that his election meant hard work for everybody concerned. He will at once begin preparing for the campaign of 1890.

RELIEF FOR STRIKERS.

Car-Loads of Provisions Sent to the Northern Illinois Miners.

CHICAGO, July 19.—The first car-loads of provisions for the starving miners' families in Braidwood, Streator, Braceville, Coal City, LaSalle, Spring City and other mining points in northern Illinois contributed by several leading merchants and warehouse men of this city, left the Chicago and Alton depot Friday, and will be followed by others over the Alton and Rock Island roads as speedily as the cars can be loaded. Congressman Lawler made a personal canvass of the city for the past two or three days and his appeal on behalf of the suffering and famishing people in the coal districts resulted in the speedy shipment to the two depots named of sufficient food and provisions of all kinds to at least temporarily alleviate the dire hunger and distress of the mining population of the afflicted district. The mayor has for the third time called a special meeting to be held Saturday to take active and immediate steps to mitigate the widespread and alarming distress prevailing throughout the northern Illinois coal region.

WHAT HAS BECOME OF HIM?

Professor Hogan Tries Campbell's Air Ship and Is Missing.

NEW YORK, July 17.—An experimental trip was made Tuesday by E. D. Hogan, an experienced aeronaut, in the air ship invented by Peter C. Campbell. The ascent was successfully made and the electric motor propelled the ship whichever direction the aeronaut desired. But after the ship had risen several hundred feet the propeller fan, used for raising and lowering the ship, was lost and fell to the ground. This left no means for raising or lowering except by sand bags and by letting out gas. The air ship then started on the way to the ocean, and up to a late hour Wednesday afternoon nothing had been heard of it or Professor Hogan. Grave fears for his safety are entertained.

A Scandal at Columbus, Ind.

COLUMBUS, Ind., July 20.—The people of Shelbyville are now enjoying a sensation of more than usual interest. A few days ago Professor J. C. Eagle, superintendent of the public schools there, quietly obtained a divorce from his wife. The divorce suit grew out of an alleged intimacy Mrs. Eagle had with W. T. Bogart, a former prominent citizen, but now a resident of Louisville. A short time ago Mrs. Eagle left her home, ostensibly for a visit to friends at Edinburg, but, it is alleged, instead she joined Bogart at Louisville, remaining with him several days. Professor Eagle met his wife in this city as she was returning home and quite a scene was enacted, he attempting to shoot Bogart. Mrs. Eagle is now at Indianapolis.

Presidential Appointments.

WASHINGTON CITY, July 22.—Saturday the president announced the following appointments: M. M. Hurley, of Indiana, third auditor of the treasury; James D. Brady, of Virginia, internal revenue collector for the second district, that state; consuls—Evans Blake, of Illinois, at Crefeld; Eugene O. Fecht, at Peiras Niegras; H. E. Pugh, of Indiana, at Newcastle, England; postmasters—Joseph G. McPheeters, Bloomington, Ind.; H. F. Bliss, Janesville, Wis.; Oscar F. Temple, Mauston, Wis.

Eli C. Hornaday, of Indiana, has been appointed a special timber agent.

Miners To Be Evicted.

SPRING VALLEY, Ills., July 20.—The miners are to be evicted. The Spring Valley Coal company Friday finished serving eviction notices on all the idle miners that are living in their houses. About 100 families or 500 persons, will be thrown out of house and home in a few days. They have no place to go. It is quite likely that many of the miners will resist and trouble will result. Sheriff Henderson and posse will do the evicting.

Busk Thought He Would Risk It.

FLINT, Mich., July 20.—James Busk, a Clayton township farmer, who had one legal and one divorced wife, thought the one neutralized the effect of the other, and asked his lawyer if he would be justified in taking a third. The lawyer pointed out the danger, but Busk thought he would chance it, and on Wednesday he married a well-known widow in an adjoining township. Friday he was arrested charged with bigamy.

Swept by a Deluge.

A Great Flood Disaster Visits West Virginia.

THE CLOUD-BURST'S WILD HAVOC.

Large Number of People Drowned and Heavy Loss of Property—The Kanawha Rises Six Feet and Carries Destruction Along With Its Torrent—Morristown Totally Destroyed—A Lesser Johnstown Cataclysm—Fatal Explosion of a Portable Boiler—Minor Mishaps.

PARKERSBURG, W. Va., July 20.—The greatest disaster which ever befell the Little Kanawha valley came Thursday night in the shape of a terrible cloud-burst, which has completely flooded the country, destroying many lives, carrying off thousands of dollars in property, and ruining the crops for many miles. The deluge began here about dusk. The worst of the storm struck the lower side of the Kanawha, filling small tributaries from bank to bank, and ending in the worst flood ever known here. In three hours the Kanawha rose six feet and ran out with such velocity that it carried everything before it. At this point thousands of logs and a number of boats went out or were sunk.

Three Lives Lost.

Mrs. Isaac H. Tucker, Martin Lawless, and an unknown man were drowned. Above here the destruction was still greater. Property in the Big Tygart valley is ruined. The big mill near its mouth went out and took the Tygart bridge with it. In the valley all the fences, crops, and much live stock were lost. At Chestnyville, a small town about ten miles above, half the residences were carried off bodily and left in corn fields. In Clay district a fine church and three dwellings were wrecked.

Steamers Sunk and General Havoc.

About noon information was received that the steamer Oneida had been wrecked and sunk at Enterprise. Still later a report came that the steamer S. C. Martin was sunk at Burning Springs. Everything in the little Tygart valley is also reported ruined. Heatherington's store, Capt. Spencer's residence, C. P. Cooper's residence, and that of J. W. Smith were demolished, but no lives are yet reported lost.

Similar to Johnstown's Deluge.

The worst story of all comes from Morristown, a small village near the head of Tucker creek, where the cloud-burst concentrated in all its fury, coming down on the village about midnight and totally destroying it, together with many of its people. The first report gave the loss of life at eleven, but later news seems to fix the loss at a greater number. The houses of the citizens are said to have been picked up and hurled against each other in such a short time that no chance to escape was given the people.

Some of the Victims.

Among the lost at Morristown are Jake Kiger, his brothers Joseph and Thomas, a man named Bailey, Orville West, wife and child. The body of a man believed to be another Morristown victim was found on Richardson's farm yesterday morning. At Pill Brush all bridges and culverts are washed away and it is impossible to reach or communicate with that point or any other on the upper waters. It is impossible now to enumerate the loss even here, as the river is still rising and tearing everything loose.

A Boat-Load of People Adrift.

A family boat containing three or four persons went out during the night, and it is believed that all are lost, as the last seen of them was when a woman held up a child in her arms and beckoned for assistance as her house disappeared in the flood.

A freight train on the Ohio River railroad broke through a trestle at Harris' Ferry, completely wrecking the train and fatally injuring William Neptune, an employe. The wreck was caused by a heavy washout.

A Baltimore and Ohio train, delayed by washouts at Kanawha station, has reported that lock No. 1, above the city on the Little Kanawha, had given way before the flood.

Burned to Death in a Tannery.

BROCKWAYVILLE, Pa., July 20.—Fire yesterday morning burned the Eagle Valley tannery, together with 500 cords of oak bark. John Striker, an employe, was burned to death. Andrew Striker, John Westerline, John Bargeston, John Fisher, and George Smith were seriously burned and several other employes slightly.

The Revolver Was All Right.

BRANTFORD, Ont., July 20.—While Albert Lawrence, a clerk in Morton's hardware store, was showing some revolvers to a customer named Frederick Cox yesterday morning, he snapped one to prove that it was all right. The revolver was loaded and the bullet entered Cox's breast killing him within a few minutes.

Children Crushed by a Lumber Pile.

LOWELL, Mass., July 20.—While a party of children were playing on a teeter-board in Howle's lumber yard yesterday afternoon, a lumber pile fell upon them. Willie Mahony, 12 years old, was terribly mangled, and died before he could be taken home. Johnny Stevens was badly injured, and it is feared that he will die.

Never Will Be Heard From.

NEW YORK, July 20.—Up a late hour last night the missing balloonist, Hogan, had not been heard from.

The State-Makers' Work.

CHICAGO, July 20.—Reports from the territorial conventions show the following progress yesterday: At Sioux Falls, D. T., all the reports made Thursday were adopted, and a dozen other reports submitted. At Olympia, W. T., the terms of supreme court judges were fixed at six years, and superior judges at four years, with salaries respectively of $4,000 and $3,000 per annum. At Bismarck, D. T., a proposition was introduced for fixing railway rates by the courts.

Commander Warner Speaks Officially.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., July 20.—Maj. Warner, commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, has issued a general order in which he urges all the Grand Army of the Republic posts of the country to send as large delegations as possible to the national encampment at Milwaukee. The tender of services by the Missouri department of escort for the commander-in-chief is accepted. The day for the parade is set for Aug. 27.

An Iron King's Failure.

ELKHORN, Wis., July 17.—John E. Burton, known as the Gogebic iron king during the mining craze two years ago, has made an assignment, Gage E. Tarbell, of Milwaukee, being the assignee. The liabilities of Mr. Burton are stated to be about $825,000, and the Central Trust company, of New York, whose claim is $350,000, is the heaviest creditor. The assets are stated at about $700,000.

BEAUTY, RICH AND RARE.

THE MAGNIFICENT ART EXHIBITION NOW PREPARING

For the People of Michigan—Michigan Art and Artists—Some of the Most Famous Paintings in the World Coming to This State.

The people of Michigan have advanced wonderfully in art education within the last twenty-five years. Still a great body are lamentably deficient, large masses not yet having advanced beyond the chromo stage. Nevertheless Michigan may now proudly boast of having produced the most distinctively American artist of world-wide reputation, in the person of F. S. Church, and a score or more of artists of considerable fame. Twenty-five years ago there were hardly any purchasers of really good paintings to be found in the state. Now there are a number of private collections, some of them containing pictures famous both in Europe and America, while humble but still meritorious collections may be counted by dozens, and single paintings of a fair grade are scattered all over the state. In short true art is both appreciated and paid for in Michigan by a rapidly increasing body of the people.

MICHIGAN ART GALLERIES.

There are but two public art galleries of note in the state. The first of these is the H. C. Lewis art gallery, at Coldwater. Mr. Lewis was the first wealthy gentleman in the State to begin a really fine art collection. About a quarter of a century ago he had his plans well laid. His collection embraces pictures from most of the best American artists, and is worth a fortune. His will gives the gallery to the University of Ann Arbor whenever his wife dies, and is a fine example of liberal public spirit. The Detroit Museum of Art is the other public gallery. Its collection is an excellent one for a progressive school of art, though the Museum has not yet acquired the ownership of many famous pictures, but it has a number of famous pictures loaned to its use and on exhibition.

PRIVATE COLLECTIONS.

There are a number of excellent private art collections in the state, some of them containing works of rare value, and all possessing undeniable merit. Among these are the well-known collections of Gen. R. A. Alger, Senator James McMillan, M. S. Smith, D. M. Ferry, Bela Hubbard, H. S. Pingree, U. S. Minister to Spain Thos. W. Palmer, F. J. Hecker, David Whitney, jr., George S. Davis, F. Freer (who has the best and largest collection of etchings in the United States), and the Detroit Club, in Detroit; Senator Stockbridge, Kalamazoo, Col. George C. Briggs, Grand Rapids, R. G. Peters, Marlstee, ex Governor Dayd H. Jerome, Saginaw and C. H. Hackley, Muskegon.

MICHIGAN ARTISTS.

Michigan has produced a number of famous artists, and contains many of large present promise. One of the pioneers in fame was J. M. Stanley (deceased) who became the most noted delineator of Indians and Indian scenes. Robert Hopkin, fine marine painter, was among the early Michigan artists. Among others who achieved early reputation were J. M. Hartig, of Grand Rapids, Hurley Moore, Kalamazoo, Alvah Bradish, L. T. Ives, W. B. Conely, Mortimer L. Smith, and J. K. Trego, Detroit.

Among the famous Michigan artists of today, Randolph Rogers, the sculptor, of Ann Arbor, Fred. S. Church and Larry Earle, Grand Rapids, Gari J. Melchers, Julius Rolshoven and Robert Gies, Detroit, are conspicuous. Mr. Melchers has the medals of the Paris and Amsterdam salons, and Mr. Rolshoven the Paris salon medal. Mr. Gies has sold a small pastelle for a high price to L'Art, the best art magazine in the world.

Among our promising artists are: Robert Wickenden, W. T. Trego (now pupil of Messonier, Paris), Robert J. Sprunk, F. P. Paulus, Percy Ives, Arthur J. Goodman, H. S. Bullock, C. E. Hulburt, Detroit, and Will Howe, Grand Rapids (pupil of Von Marke, the famous cattle painter. One of Mr. Howe's cattle pieces was purchased by the French government, and was given a medal in the salon), and John Owen (water colors).

MICHIGAN LADY ARTISTS.

Michigan has several women who give promise of good art work. Among them are Miss Helen Roby (now in Paris), Miss Carol M. Albright (teacher in New York), Misses Goulson, sisters, Miss Kate Allmond, Miss Florence Waterman (formerly of Grand Rapids).

Mr. A. J. Brow, art dealer, Detroit, first brought out the Stanley Indian paintings in chromo, and made them familiar to the people. He has always been a memoer of the hanging committees at art exhibitions, and has done much to promote public interest and education in art.

MAGNIFICENT ART SHOW.

The great International Exposition, to be held in Detroit in September, is now constructing an immense Art Gallery, to be lighted and hung in the best modern methods, in which will be placed the largest, costliest and finest art exhibition ever shown to the American public. It will draw the rarest art treasures from the galleries and collections mentioned above, and will also import at a great expense the largest and most famous collection ever gathered in the United States, and never before shown to the American public. This is the celebrated American Art Fund collection of the best works by two hundred of the best American artists in Europe, comprising about three hundred and fifty pictures of rare merit, of which about fifty are fresh from the latest Paris salon. Among the famous artists represented in this collection are Church, the Morans, Hamilton, Poore, Chase, Thorne, J. G. Brown, Brush, Walker, Pauli, Brooks, Payton and Gore. One of the pictures is a remarkable landscape by Pauli, selected for a medal, and Poore's wonderful prize picture,

THE NIGHT OF THE NATIVITY,

which has created a sensation among the artists and critics of Europe and America. The Exhibition will also include the world-famous Last Hours of Mozart, owned by Gen. Alger. One of the rarest and richest exhibits will be Makoffski's famous great painting,

THE RUSSIAN WEDDING FEAST,

never before exhibited in the United States, and secured for the great Michigan International Exposition at a cost of about five hundred dollars a day for each day it will remain on show. There will also be a profusion of famous statuary and other art works.

This Art Exhibition cannot fail not only to attract the people of Michigan by thousands, but it will be of wide and permanent benefit as a school of popular education in art, filling the eye and the mind with rich object lessons of beauty and cultivated taste in both form and color.

THE BARBER'S OPINION.

"Some people think 'tis only made
For cleansing goods of heavy grade,
For washing down the walls or stairs,
The bureau, tables and the chairs;
But folks do well to change their mind;
'Tis not to things like these confined,
And not alone the kitchen maid
And laundress prize its friendly aid;
I find it just the nicest thing
For toilet use and barbering.
The slightest touches will suffice
To make a foamy lather rise,
That holds the beard till smoothly laid,
However dull may be the blade.
In short, the tale is ever new
That tells what IVORY SOAP will do."

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

Lansing folks are in the full en-jaw-ment of a chewing gum factory.

Nearly $11,000,000 worth of export products made their escape from the state via the Port Huron custom house for the fiscal year ending June 30.

A Mt. Morris farmer fed his potato bugs on Paris green, and his cows, witnessing the operation, thought there must be something appetising in sugar for lean, and so broke out that night for a feast. A rapid decrease in that farmer's dairy was the sad but inevitable result.

The Michigan wool clip for 1888 is estimated from the best data available, to reach 11,400,000 pounds. Several pairs of pants in a bundle like that.

Whiteford, the Soo party who planted John Maloney on the evergreen shore, has been acquitted by the jury who tried the case, on the ground that Maloney was a dangerous character, whose "removal" to another clime was a contribution to the well being and safety of Soo society. And doubtless they took a level-headed view of the situation.

Liquor suits are still fermenting at Muskegon, and at least one class of Sawdust City folks are happy in consequence of the effervesce—the lawyers.

Hastings people propose to try and keep up with the procession, and so have subscribed $10,000 for the establishment of a whip factory.

A West Brookfield firm of Cotswold sheep breeders claim to have sold $3.25 worth of wool per head from their entire flock this season. That's a profitable wool pul, and no mistake.

Upper peninsula officials—some of 'em, at least—seem to have queer notions of official duty. A sheriff of the Bessemer region who attended a prize fight, not only took no steps to prevent it, but actually served as time-keeper.

It takes $60,000 worth of wheels to fit out the carts and carriages made at Flint in a single year, and the Flinters are wondering why in sixty somebody don't make 'em right at home instead of sending so much money away to help build up other towns.

An English sparrow that resides at Jackson—where strange things are always kept on tap—recently found a cracker that was too hard for its sharp little bill to penetrate. Presently it flew away with the cracker and deposited it on the rail of a street car track where it was soon ground fine by the wheels of a passing car. No use trying to exterminate a bird with such cunning as that.

The Grand Rapids boy who was fined for stealing a base ball thinks it hardly fair when all the other players are commended for stealing bases. But then, there's quite a difference 'twixt bases and balls—in the eyes of the law.

A Sandstone family, consisting of father, mother and fifteen children, reside in a log house fourteen feet square. The lower portion of the domicile contains but a single room, furnished with a cook stove and two beds, the attic being reached by a ladder. Such things were common in pioneer days, but have been pretty much evoluted out by the advance of civilization.

A fellow with an excellent financial vision and a wonderfully prophetic tongue, has been amusing Lenawee county folks at 50 cents per head by cajoling the spirits of departed friends back to earthy scenes. The price is certainly reasonable; in fact, we'd gladly pay the fee for a satisfactory interview with certain people who owed us liberally when they departed hence, the debts still remaining unpaid.

Detective Norris at Baltimore.

BALTIMORE, Md., July 20.—John T. Norris, the detective who was in New York a day or two ago looking for the prize fighters, arrived here Saturday morning. Kilrain's friends soon got wind of his presence and hustled Jake to a place of safety in the suburbs of the city. Norris called upon the marshal of police, and presented what purported to be a requisition from Governor Lowry of Mississippi for the arrest of Kilrain, Mitchell and Donovan. The marshal told him that he was ready to do his duty, but that the requisition was no requisition. It was not regular, and he could not take any notice of it. The detective then made his exit from the city.

The Sherman Trouble at Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y., July 20.—The expert examination of the affairs of the firm of Sherman Bros. & Co. is drawing to a close. It is said the shortage has not been overstated at from $250,000 to $300,000. Some say it will exceed this latter amount. Wilson H. Sherman has returned to Van Buren Point and is completely prostrated. His physician pronounces his condition serious. Mr. Sherman says that the firm lost about $252,000 in a barley deal a few months ago, and added: "I have over $200,000 worth of stock at my command, and God helping me, every cent will be paid."

In the event of this arrangement being carried out, Prince Albert Victor will obtain Marlborough house.

WASHINGTON CITY, July 20.—Mr. Matthews, the young Virginia artist who was so successful in touching up the historical painting of Washington in the east room of the White house last summer, is now engaged in similar work upon the portrait of Abraham Lincoln. The canvas of the Lincoln portrait is not near so well preserved as was that of the Washington painting, and Mr. Matthews will be obliged to give the former an entirely new backing by pasting it upon a sheet of new canvas.

Poisoned for Their Insurance.

WILKESBARRE, Pa., July 20.—The coroner's verdict in the cases of Mrs. Craiben and Mrs. Glynn, who died recently under suspicious circumstances, was rendered Friday night, and is to the effect that the deceased died from poisoning, and that the evidence points to Edward Glynn and wife as the guilty parties. The Glynns, who are now in jail, are believed to have committed the murders in order to secure the insurance on the lives of their victims.

Cut His Way Out of Jail.

BENNINGTON, Vt., July 20.—Billy Pease, a noted cracksman who was awaiting trial for burglary at North Bennington last year, cut his way out of jail here with a case-knife Friday night. He had been allowed some liberties on account of his alleged poor health, but it seems that he has been shamming. His two confederates recently escaped from the Manchester jail and Pease could have escaped with them, but declined to do so.

Trouble About a Lottery Ticket.

CHICAGO, July 20.—Lena Luries, a notion store keeper, in partnership with her cousin, Robert Luries, bought a $1 lottery ticket some time since, which, she says, drew a prize of $15,000. CALIFORNIA LETTER.

To the Herald:

Owing to poor health I have'ntbeen able to write for some time, but will now try and continue my letters. In my last I spoke of the fruits being profitably grown here. As in the east, to make the growing of fruit profitable certain conditions are necessary and adaptability for the business. Second, an understanding of the locality and soils best adapted to the different kinds of fruit, the best modes of cultivation and pruning. Third, a thorough knowledge of the markets within reach, the best kinds of fruits for each market, the best style of package, manner of packing and putting upon the market. There is no one thing that has to do with the profits of fruit growing than this third condition. These points can only be learned by close study and observation. That money can be made here growing fruit without attention and with but little labor is a great mistake and is the cause of many failures. Profitable fruit growing requires more study, attention and hard labor than in the east owing to the climate, the condition of the seasons and the nature of the soil. The orchard requires different management and the soil different treatment and cultivation. There are insect pests to contend with, though requiring more labor, yet the profits of fruit growing can be made much greater than in the east from the fact that abundant crops are assured every year with no casualities to destroy them. There are great improvements and advancements yet to be made in the growing of fruit in California.

At this time there is being held in this city a meeting of the California State Horticultural Society, and a large number of the leading fruit growers of the State are in attendance, and reports will be made from all parts of the State, and it is expected that great benefit will accrue to the industry in this country. In connection with the convention is a display of the fruits grown in this country, and the display is grand not only of fruits but of flowers and vegetables that would open the eyes of the Eastern people to the capabilites of the country. Immense pyramids of oranges and lemons, many of them of immense size and beauty such as are rarely seen in the east, enormous vegetables and beautiful flowers, beets, the seed of which was sown in July last measuring from two feet to three and one-half feet long, one four feet long and from 6 to ten inches in diameter. The floral decorations are beautiful and green houses were not called on for flowers, all were grown in the open air. There is a fine display of strawberries. This exhibit shows the capabilities of the country and what can be done with fruit and vegetables.

To the question, can any thing be grown without irrigation? We answer yes; most of the fruits, grains and vegetables can be grown without irrigation. Though the season is shorter, there are but few sections of the country where crops cannot be profitably grown without irrigation, yet by a judicious application of water the season may be extended through the whole year and the profits corespondingly increased.

Although we have seven months without any rain, yet we do not suffer from droughth as in the east. It is true that all vegetation whose roots grow near the surface dry up and die when the land is not cultivated and the surface of the country looks seared and yellow. Yet this same land when broken and cultivated thoroughly will grow many things. There are many species of trees, fruits and vegetables, that grow and produce paying crops on land broken and cultivated that before was completely barren through most of the dry season.

The reason for this is that the composition, and condition of the under soil is such that the water of the winter rains are absorbed and held in store, and when the dry season comes on and the surface soil is stirred and kept loose and fine the moisture from below rises to the surface. In the latter months of the dry season I have seen excavations made as deep as six feet with not the least sign of moisture, the soil so hard from the very surface that it could not be dug with a shovel and have to be loosened with a pick, and this, close to land cultivated where moist soil was found very near the surface. The under soil is of a clayey nature,not such clays as we have in the east yet brick are made from it; this clay when dry and hard and is dug with a pick, is very hard to penetrate and does not break off in chunks, but crumbles off in fine lumps like very course gravel or nut coal. This soil is generally very deep and its nature is such that water readily penetrates it and there holds it in suspension ready to yield up its stores for the benefit of crops, as soon as the seals are broken on the surface and the syphon of cultivation applied.

This soil is of such a nature that when even the surface cannot be dug without a pick, that after a heavy rain it is not safe to drive a loaded team out of the beaten track. I have seen many a team stalled and even mired down where the ground appeared as firm as the track, from turning out to shun a water or mud hole, and this not on low ground, but on high level and rolling ground. Where this strata or clayey soil is hallow it is generally underlaid with a porus sand rock which retains moisture which yields up its stores as soon as the upper valves are open.

The early settlers in the country when they came here found that nothing grew on the mesa or table lands and the hills only save brush and a few dwarf shrubs, grass and wild oats, in the winter season, concluded that the lands were barren, and that nothing could be done at farming only in the valleys and along the streams, and settled on these, but in after years it was found that on these barren lands that as soon as they were broken that they would produce almost anything that was planted on them and give paying crops from the winter rains, and that when water was applied in the dry season was prolonged and the profits were increased, and that for many things they were superior to the valleys as being better adapted to fruits and for their easier cultivation.

Nature has provided this whole section with every thing requisite to make it not only the pleasantest most beautiful and luxurious home for man on this continent if not in the whole world, and its conditions and surroundings are such as to attract the higher element of refinement and moral elevation.

Nature has provided every thing necessary and it only requires the intelligence and labor of man to bring them out and apply them. But it is a mistaken idea that wealth and comfort can be obtained here without labor.

Nature has provided thousands of reservoirs, which only require the labor of man to build dams in narrow gorges to hold back the waters in store against the time for need, and these reservoirs are rapidly being constructed, and means being provided for the distribution of water over the conntry as fast as it is settled and developed. Water is King when it can be controlled and used as needed and in this country renders the cultivators independant of the elements.

A Good Appetite

Is essential to good health; but at this season it is often lost, owing to the poverty or impurity of the blood, derangement of the digestive organs, and the weakening effect of the changing season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a wonderful medicine for creating an appetite, toning digestion, and giving strength to the whole system. Now is the time to take it. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla.

The "Mother's Friend"

Not only shortens labor and lessens pain attending it, but greatly diminishes the danger to life of both mother and child if used a few months before confinement. Write to The Bradfield Regulator Co., Atlanta, Ga., for further particulars. Sold by all druggists.

DEATH OF THOMAS H. MOSHER.

Another old pioneer of Lenawee county has gone to his final reward. Thomas H. Mosher, who for more than fifty years was an honored resident of Cambridge in this county, has for the past two years been living in the village of Manchester. On Tuesday of last week he fell from the back steps of his residence to the ground, a distance of some eight feet, striking upon his head. He was picked up in an unconscious condition and survived only a short time. Medical aid was summoned at once but it was of no avail.

Mr. Mosher was born in Union Springs, N. Y., Oct. 18th, 1815. He lived with his parents until he attained his majority, receiving such an education as the common schools of that day afforded. In 1831 he went into his father's store as a clerk and remained there until 1836. In August of that year he came to Michigan and settled in the town of Cambridge. In company with John Hart he opened a store at Springville, which was conducted under the firm name of Hart & Mosher until 1848, when the firm dissolved. In 1848 Mr. Mosher built the store which he occupied for many years thereafter. So far as known he was engaged in the mercantile business for more consecutive years than any other resident of this county. He began as a clerk in 1831, and from 1836 to 1886, a period of fifty years, he conducted business for himself in the village of Springville. In 1856 in company with Ambrose S. Berry, Mr. Mosher built the Lake Mills, near Springville, which have been in successful operation ever since. He afterwards purchased the entire property which he owned and operated for many years. In 1843 he was a member of the State Legislature and served on the Ways and Means committee. At this time the question of selling the State railroads came up, consisting of the Central line then running from Detroit to Jackson, and the Southern from Monroe to Hillsdale. Mr. Mosher as a member of that committee took an active part in the negotiations which resulted in the sale of the roads. In the years 1843 and 1845 he served as superyisor of the township of Cambridge. He also served several years as township clerk and township treasurer. He was a member of the Masonic Fraternity, and had belonged to Adrian Commandery Knights Templar for many years.

On the 7th of July 1842 he was married to Miss Harriet N. Moore of Springport, N. Y., by whom he had one child, Rachel, who was born Aug. 10th, 1843 Mrs. Mosher died in 1875. In 1880 he married Miss Lucy Ward who survives him. His daughter also survives him, who is now Mrs. Hannibal Osborn, and lives in Tecumseh.

The funeral obsequies were conducted on Thursday last under the charge of Manchester Lodge F. & A. M. of which he was a member, Rev. J. M. Getchell officiating. The remains were conveyed to Cambridge Junction by an escort of six Sir Knights and were deposited in the family vault at the Cambridge cemetery in accordance with the solemn burial service of the Knights Templar.

For the past few years Mr. Mosher had been in feeble health, and had led a quiet, retired life, but for nearly half a century, he filled a large niche in the history of the town in which he lived. During the days of his business prosperity he was a generous neighbor and a public spirited citizen. He gave liberally of his time and means to raise the bonus for the M. & O. railroad. He built a beautiful family vault in the Cambridge Cemetery, and manifested his public spirit in many other ways. It is a singular coincidence that he should have been called so soon after the decease of his brother in law, Wm. Queal. His good deeds and noble traits will be remembered to his credit now that he is gathered to his fathers.

WEST POINT and ANNAPOLIS.

To the boys of the 2d Congressional District:

I shall hold a competitive examination at the High School building in the city of Adrian on Tuesday, Aug. 6th, at 9 o'clock a. m., to determine whom I shall send to West Point and Annapolis, respectively, as cadets. There is a vacancy existing in each of these schools at present, to be filled from this district.

The successful candidate for West Point must be not less than 17 nor more than 22 years of age in June, 1890, and the candidate for the Naval Academy must be not less than 15 nor more than 20 years of age Sept. 1st next.

The examinations will be in reading spelling, arithmetic, English grammar, descriptive geography and history of the U. S., beside such other elementary branches as the examining board may see fit to take up. Candidates must be physically sound, and a thorough examination by your physician would save disappointment from being rejected by the physician who will examine you at Adrian.

Edward P. Allen.

A PLEASANT TRIP.

I boarded the train at Tecumseh and turned my face westward, arriving at Augusta. I stepped off to be conveyed to the central depot. There I met the genial smile of Agent Arner, and the train having gone I accepted an invitation to go home with him and share the hospitality of his lovely wife. I accepted with pleasure, stopping over night, and the next day boarded the train for Mattawan, with a promise I would stop over when I came back. I arrived at Mattawan at three o'clock. There I met a friend who conveyed me to the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Emmons, former residents of Lake Ridge. Any one who had ever been under their roof can imagine how I was entertained. It being rainy it was rather gloomy for a few days, but suddenly the sun appeared and everything looked so beautiful I took a drive out to the village of Lawton, taking in the fruit farms and other beautiful scenery, thence wending our way through the village, taking another route back to the home of host and hostess.

After dinner we enjoyed a game of croquet and other amusements. Why is it that some people who go to the same place say they have been to Paw Paw? Either the people are stylish or is Paw Paw a more stylish name.

Next day I started back to Augusta to fulfill my promise. I stopped over another night with Agent Arner and wife. In the afternoon Mrs A and myself started for the beautiful race grounds where there was to be a ball game between Galesburg and Augusta clubs. Arriving there we saw the new grand stand that had been erected for the races that come off next week. It is a very fine structure, and one that Augusta might be well proud of.

We did not stay until the game closed, but returned home. After tea Agent Arner procured a horse and carriage, and we in company of Mr. and Mrs. Kendal and boy, started for Sherman's Lake for a drive and amusements, and to try our luck in fishing, but we had fisherman's luck. Before I proceed I must give a description of our drive to Sherman's Lake. It is three miles from the village; between is what is called Pond Lily Lake one of the most beautiful places eye ever beheld. It is a lake of flowers. Pen cannot describe its beauty and loveliness. We passed on to Sherman Lake, procured a boat and started out on the water, but a dark cloud hung over head and we were reminded that a storm was approaching, so we wended our way back across the dark water, and as the sun was setting, sending forth its golden rays and forming a pinkish tint upon the dark clouds, it was magnificent and grand. Soon the bow of promise appeared in all its lovliness, and the tinted clouds and bright clouds and bright colors of the rain bow formed a picturesque scenery of beauty never to be forgotten by us. Soon we reached shore and started for home, feeling we had whiled away a few hours and our time well spent. I will not worry your patience further but would advise any one stopping at Augusta, to be sure to call on Agent Arner and wife if they want to be highly entertained and have a good time. Bidding my host and hostess goodbye, I boarded the train and started homeward, arrived at Tecumseh safe and sound, with nothing to mar the pleasure and happiness of the writer.

A VISIT TO DEVILS LAKE.

We took advantage of the last excursion train to this resort to spend a day there, and look "round about." Owing to the cold rainy weather in the month of June, the season opened rather slowly, but the hotels and cottages are rapidly filling up now and business is booming all round the lake.

The train arrived at Devils Lake at 11:30 A. M. We registered at Allen's Hotel and braced up with a good square dinner preparatory to a little exercise. After dinner we cabbaged a light row boat at Allen's dock and started on a single handed trip across the lake. Our first halt was at Allen's Island Grove picnic grounds. The grove has lost none of its beauty since last season and is a most commodious place for holding picnics, camp meetings, etc. Two of the cottages on these grounds were occupied that day.

We then rowed across to the east side and halted at Burridge's landing. Found Justice Burridge and his famly at home and the latch string out. His cottage is located on one of the most beautiful points on the entire lake. With the exception of Stoney Grove it is the highest point about the lake. He owns about six acres of land, a part of which is under water, but he has high land enough, and two or three more cottages equally as good as the present one could be built thereon. His house has a fine porch in front. It contains a good sized family room, four sleeping apartments and a kitchen. Easy steps lead down to the water's edge. The shore there is entirely free from weeds, and has a gravel bottom. In short it is a beautiful location for a summer house.

After an hour's restwe started south again and rowed directly across to the railroad dock at Manitou Beach. The new village is getting well started. Twenty-one buildings are already erected and several more are under way. Uncle Charley Spafford is well fixed. He has a nice house only a few rods from the landing. It is two stories, with an addition at the front end in which he keeps a supply of fruits, candies, cigars, soft drinks and ice cream. The upper story of the house is used for sleeping rooms. Wm. Bresie's new cottage is located just west of Spafford's, there being one vacant lot between them. The family are now domiciled there, and also Mrs. Crowell and her children, where they will probably remain thro. August.

Beardsell's and Coe's, both on the south side, are enjoying a fair patronage at present.

As our row of about five miles had given us enough exercise for one day, we returned to Allen's on Fred Deuel's steamer G. A. R. Fred has painted and fixed up his boat this spring, and it runs like a top. Among the small steamers his boat seems to be the favorite.

A large Tecumseh party registered at Allen's last Saturday the 20th, where they will remain until the 29th: Mr. and Mrs. P. V. Woodard, Dr. R. S. Copeland, Dr. W. N. Fowler, W. N. Hurlbut, J. H. Primrose, and Misses Minnie Jones, Nellie Lawrence, Stella Anthony, Stella Cleveland and Jennie Heck. Walter Burridge was of the party, but a portion of his time will be spent at his father's cottage. Miss Ella Jackson and her friends Hattie Smith of Parshallville and Lou Arner of Ridgeway are spending this week at Manitou Beach. Misses Nellie and Hattie Conklin and Hattie Bates are at the Bresie cottage. With these various parties located at the north and south extremities of the lake, we opine that most of the row boats will be kept busy this week.

Allen's Hotel is well filled with guests now, and is a model summer home. The rooms are all large and airy and well kept and Mrs Allen sets an excellent table. Guests who stop there once always go again.

Everyone has birthday anniversaries, but not everyone is remembered on those occasions as was Miss Emma Morse last Thursday afternoon. At five o'clock about twenty young ladies armed with umbrellas and lunch baskets called at Mrs. Morse's residence. They were evidently expected by part of the family and were warmly welcomed. The baskets yielded a bountiful supply of good things which were heartily enjoyed. Emma was again reminded of her birthday by finding a beautiful gold watch chain on her plate, presented by her friends as a token of their regard. A very pleasant hour was enjoyed.

A GENEROUS OFFER.—The celebrated Dr. Gleason, after a practice of forty years, having during all that time made the cure of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption his special study, has in this time so perfected his treatment as to be able to cure nearly all who suffer from these complaints. Having reached the age of seventy years, he realizes that the time is near at hand when these valuable remedies must be in other hands or become lost to the world. Desiring that his Home Treatment should be within the reach of all, he has placed the prescriptions with the Hall Chemical Company; this company, knowing the wonderful success of the Home Treatment in the cure of all Throat and Lung Troubles, have decided to send the full treatment ON TRIAL to any one who wishes to try it. Dr. Gleason has also written a valuable treatise on these diseases, which is profusely illustrated with finely executed wood-cuts, showing the Head, Throat and Lungs as they are when diseased; it discusses in an able manner the cause and cure of these complaints; it is printed on heavy super-calendered paper and handsomely bound. This book, together with full instructions how to order on trial, will be sent free to all who will write and ask for it. Address

ISRAEL ASKS FOR A KING.

LESSON IV, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, JULY 28.

Text of the Lesson, 1 Sam. viii, 4-20—Commit to Memory Verses 6-7—Golden Text, 1 Sam. viii. 19—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

(Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.)

4. "Then all the elders of Israel gathered themselves together, and came to Samuel unto Ramah." After the defeat of the Philistines recorded in the last lesson, they troubled Israel no more all the days of Samuel, for the hand of the Lord was against them; there was peace also between Israel and the Amorites (chap. vii, 13, 14), so that their repentance and reliance upon the Lord brought them victory over their enemies, and peace and prosperity because the Lord was with them. Samuel was the Lord's representative in their midst, and sought their true welfare in the sight of God. As their judge he went in circuit from year to year to Bethel, Gilgal and Mizpeh, and had his home at Ramah, or Ramathaim Zophim, in Mount Ephraim, where also his father and mother had lived, and where he in due time died and was buried (1 Sam. i, 1; xxv, 1) after having anointed to their office the first two kings over all Israel, Saul and David. Samuel's house, and altar unto the Lord at Ramah (chap. vii, 17) remind us of Abram's tent and altar (Gen. xii, 8; xiii, 18); as pilgrims here we should be well content with any place of sojourn that the Lord may give us, but be sure to have in the home an altar unto the Lord, a whole hearted reliance upon the merits of His sacrifice, and constant communion with Him. Only as we see more of God than of man, and abide in Him, can we be faithful servants of His in this present evil world. That Samuel's sons walked not in his ways (v. 3) is simply a proof that righteousness is not hereditary; consider the sons of David, and also Manasseh son of Hezekiah; and impress it upon the children that they must each one for himself accept Jesus as their Saviour; that the fact of father or mother being a Christian will not save them.

5. "Make us a king to judge us like all the nations." God had chosen Israel that they might be unto Him a peculiar treasure above all people—a kingdom of priests, an holy nation (Ex. xix, 5, 6), or, as Balaam said, "The people shall dwell alone and shall not be reckoned among the nations" (Num. xxiii, 9). God had made them higher than all nations. He Himself was their king; His power was their strength, His presence their glory, and this request was like saying, "We do not care to be so different from other nations; let us have a king that we can see and let us be like other people."

6. "The thing displeased Samuel, * * * Samuel prayed unto the Lord." Samuel was one with God, from a child he had ministered to the Lord, and in this request he saw their sin and downfall, and was grieved for them and jealous for the glory of God.

7. "And the Lord said unto Samuel * * * they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me that I should not reign over them." Their conduct was not a surprise to God; He had foreseen it all, and knew from the beginning their evil hearts and how they would treat Him (Deut. xxii, 16), yet He loved them, many a time He forgave them, heard them and delivered them when they cried unto Him, sent them prophet after prophet to win them back to him, and finally sent His own Son as their Messiah, but even Him they rejected and crucified, saying, "We have no king but Cæsar." The time will yet come when they shall receive the Lord Jesus as their King and rejoice in Him and He in them before all the nations of the earth (Jer. xxiii, 5-8; Lu. i, 32, 33). The great question for my soul and for your soul, dear reader, is, "Am I cheerfully accepting Jesus as my King and do I delight in His will?"

8. "They have forsaken me and served other gods; so do they also unto thee." Samuel seems to have felt that they were turning against him, and that it was poor treatment of him even if he was old to ask for a king to take his place; this was a natural feeling and we are all apt to give way to it, but the servant of the Lord must remember that when he is despised or rejected or persecuted for the truth's sake, that it is the Lord who is thus treated and not the servant merely, and the Lord will see to it.

9. "Hearken unto their voice, * * * yet protest solemnly." God wants cheerful, willing service, the love of Christ constraining; He does not love that which is done grudgingly.

10. "Samuel told all the words of the Lord unto the people." Just as when, as a child, he told Eli every whit of the Lord's message (chap. iii, 18), even though it was a message of judgment, so now he declares faithfully all the words of the Lord. He is no man pleaser, he will speak the Lord's message faithfully (Gal. i, 10; Jer. xxiii, 28), leaving results to God. It is to be feared that many things are left unsaid from many pulpits, because if said they might offend some prominent people.

11. "This will be the manner of the king that shall reign over you." A God of love will not let His people rush into ruin blindly.

11-17 "He will take." Six times in these verses are these three words repeated, it is the number of a perfect oppressor as 666 is the number of the last great oppressor of the people of God ere the kingdom comes (Rev. xiii, 18). Contrast the seven "I wills" of God in Ex. vi, 6-8; Lev. xxvi, 3-13, and notice how God is always giving while this king is said to be always taking, and not once is he spoken of as giving. Not only will he be an oppressor of the people, but he will be a robber of God, for it is twice said (vs. 15, 17) that he will take the tenth, which is God's special portion (see Lev. xxvii, 30, 32), and appropriate it to himself.

18. "And ye shall cry out in that day, because of your king, which ye shall have chosen you; and the Lord will not hear you in that day." God fills His people with such blessings that they cry out and shout for joy (Isa. xii, 6), but this will be a cry because of oppression, and inasmuch as they voluntarily accept the oppressor instead of the deliverer, they are told that it will be vain for them to cry unto the Lord. (Prov. i, 25-28; Isa. i, 15; Mic. iii, 4.) As we sow we must reap (Gal. vi, 7; Hos. viii, 7). How insane we must be if we refuse the goodness and the love of God and persist in sowing for ourselves that which will bring a harvest of misery instead of a harvest of glory.

19. "Nay, but we will have a king over us." Thus, though fully forewarned, they persist in their mad career, determined to have their own way regardless of consequences. Faithful Samuel is to them a man of a past age, he is behind the times, good old man, but in their estimation now in his dotage; so like the people in the days of Jeremiah they seem to say, "As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee, but we will certainly do whatsoever thing goeth forth out of our own mouth." (Jer. xliv, 16, 17.) Is it not a foreshadowing of the time when this same sinful nation had to choose between their true Messiah and a robber, and they decided in favor of the robber and murderer, saying, "Not this man, but Barabbas." (John xviii, 40.)

20. "That we may be like all the nations." Thus our lesson begins and ends. They want a man rather than God, a visible king to rule over them, go before them, and fight their battles.

CHICAGO, July 19.—With the exception of Cleveland the western clubs of the National league got the small end of the scores all round yesterday, the "babies" managing to tie Washington in a ten-inning game. The scores were: At New York—Indianapolis 2, New York 4; at Boston—Boston 8, Chicago 1; at Philadelphia—Philadelphia 15, Pittsburg 0; at Washington City—Washington 5, Cleveland 5—ten innings, darkness.

CHICAGO, July 20.—In the only two games played yesterday by National league clubs that will go on record th westerners captured the score; the Washington-Cleveland game was stopped by rain at the end of the fourth inning, with the Cleveland club one tally ahead. No game at Philadelphia—rain. Scores: At Boston—Boston 6, Chicago 13; at New York—New York 8, Indianapolis 9. The American association clubs did not play yesterday.

Saturday's scores in the League were as follows: At Boston—Boston 0, Chicago 2; at New York—New York 8, Indianapolis 5; at Washington—Washington 4, Cleveland 5; at Philadelphia—(first game), Philadelphia 4, Pittsburg 3—ten innings; (second game), Philadelphia 16, Pittsburg 1.

MAN AND WIFE MURDERED.

The Woman Horribly Mutilated—The Man's Sons Suspected.

DUBUQUE, Ia., July 18.—John Elkins, a tenant on the farm of Allen Porter, in Clayton county, about seven miles northeast of Edgewood, and his wife were brutally murdered in their sleeping-room about 3 o'clock yesterday morning. Elkins was killed with a rifle which he had in the house, and which, after being used, had been hung back in its place on the wall. Mrs. Elkins' head was battered to pieces with a heavy stick and her body horribly broken and mutilated.

Suspicion rests strongly on two sons of Elkins by a former wife, with whom Elkins has had frequent quarrels. The eldest of the boys, about 25 years old, has been living away from home a great deal, and the other, aged about 17, slept in the barn Tuesday night, contrary to his usual custom. Elkins was supposed to have had about $800 in the house, which has not yet been found.

Parnell Honored at Edinburgh.

EDINBURGH, July 22.—There never was a larger or more enthusiastic crowd—except possibly when Gladstone comes, here—than that which welcomed Parnell to Edinburgh Saturday. Seventy thousand people lined the route from the railway station to the hotel and made progress almost impossible by insisting on shaking hands with the Irish champion. The freedom of the city was conferred upon him in the Corn Exchange building, which was packed with a cheering multitude. In his speech Parnell was guarded in his reference to the commission, merely suggesting that if he had known that the judge would have decided the question of the Patriotic Union's books as he did he would never have appeared.

Tendered His Resignation.

CHICAGO, July 20.—It will cause general surprise in railroad circles to learn that Mr. E. T. Jeffery has tendered his resignation as general manager of the Illinois Central Railroad company. The resignation was forwarded to President Stuyvesant Fish before the latter's departure for Europe in the early part of the present month. From what can be learned no action has yet been taken on Mr. Jeffery's resignation, and it is probable that nothing definite regarding it will be done until Mr. Fish's return from Europe next October, as it is not likely that a successor to Mr. Jeffery will be selected in the absence of the president of the company.

National Editorial Association.

DETROIT, Mich., July 22.—Over $7,000 will be expended by the citizens' committee of this city in entertaining the members of the National Editorial association, which holds its fifth annual meeting in Detroit Aug. 27, 28, 29, and 30. This body is composed of delegates elected by the various state press associations, one delegate to each twenty members. About thirty states will be represented by over 300 editors. It is understood that the next convention will be held in Boston.

A Handsome Donation.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., July 19.—A few weeks since W. B. Tate, a philanthropic bachelor, of Grainger county, decided to donate a fifth of his $100,000 fortune to the maimed Confederate soldiers of east Tennessee. The distribution took place Thursday afternoon at Morristown, and forty needy one-legged and one-armed old soldiers responded, getting each $500. Tate was given a big banquet in the evening.

A Drawback on Binding Twine.

WASHINGTON CITY, July 22.—Acting Secretary Batcheller, of the treasury department, has informed the collector at Boston that a drawback at the same rate as the duty paid on the merchandise used in the manufacture, less the usual retention of 10 per centum, will be allowed on the exportation of binder twine manufactured wholly from imported manilla hemp and jute.

Mrs. Logan Home from Europe.

NEW YORK, July 20.—Mrs. John A. Logan arrived from Europe yesterday on the North German Lloyd steamer Trave. Her son, John A. Logan, Jr., and his sister, Mrs. Tucker, went down to quarantine to meet their mother on a revenue cutter. The whole party left for Youngstown, O., in the afternoon.

Over a Hundred Horses Burned.

NEW YORK, July 22.—Moses Weill's livery stable, Nos. 304, 306 and 308 East Eleventh street, was burned at 4 o'clock Saturday morning, with 125 horses, fifty vehicles, a quantity of food and other contents. Loss, $60,000.

Fights with Burglars.

One Officer and Two of the Crooks Killed.

A PISTOL BATTLE AT MIDNIGHT.

Officers Pursuing Escaped Criminals Fired Upon with Fatal Effect—The Fire Returned and a Burglar Killed—A Gang Surprised in a Store—One Bad Citizen Less—Cowardly and Atrocious Double Murder Ending with Suicide.

CLEVELAND, O., July 22.—Two young criminals escaped from the county jail about 8:30 o'clock Saturday night. They were W. A. Smith, held for grand larceny, and Richard N. Mansfield, a horse-thief. Deputy sheriffs and policemen started on their trail, and shortly after midnight two men in a buggy were overtaken by a detachment of pursuers. Revolvers were drawn, a score of shots were exchanged, and Deputy Sheriff Goldsoll, one of the best criminal officers that ever served in the city, fell with a wound that will probably prove fatal. The men in the buggy drove away.

The Buggy and a Dead Man.

Shortly afterward the buggy was found abandoned with the body of a young man, supposed to be Smith, in it. Later it developed that it was not Smith, and up to last evening the body had not been identified. The police believe that the two young men in the buggy were bent on some unlawful mission.

The Fatal Coincidence.

The result of circumstances shows a peculiar coincidence. While the sheriff's posse was looking for the escaped prisoners, a buggy containing two men came along. A cry of "halt" was made in the darkness, but instead of stopping the men drew their revolvers and commenced firing. A pitched battle of a few seconds' duration ensued, with the result that two men will lose their lives, one being dead, and the other in a dying condition. A burglar's outfit was afterward found in the buggy, which had been deserted by the man not wounded. The affair has caused quite a sensation throughout the city, but no clue to the whereabouts of the escaped prisoners had been found at a late hour last night.

Another Encounter With Burglars.

TITUSVILLE, Pa., July 20.—As Samuel DeLamater was passing Marsh & Radle's store, at Townville, at 3 o'clock Saturday morning, burglars were noticed within and the proprietors were promptly notified. Mr. Marsh, armed with a revolver, and Radle with a double-barreled shot gun, approached the store and three of the burglars ran out. Radle cried to the fugitives to halt, and when they continued to run, he put a load of shot into one of them.

The Other Barrel Did Good Work.

At this juncture another man jumped out of a rear window. Mr. Radle again cried "halt," and not being obeyed fired the second barrel. The load took effect between the man's shoulders, mortally wounding him. A priest was sent for at the burglar's request, to whom he confessed that his name was James McCuen, resident at Lancaster, Pa.

Probably a Notorious Criminal.

A description was wired to the chief of police at Lancaster from here Saturday, and he telegraphed back that the description corresponded exactly with that of the notorious criminal, "Lancaster Jim," a desperado and fugitive from justice. The physicians have given up all hope of the burglar's recovery.

An armed posse of men started in pursuit of the rest of the gang, and have tracked them as far as Little Cooley, a small hamlet ten miles distant from Townville, and nineteen miles from here.

HORRIBLE TRIPLE TRAGEDY.

A Discarded Husband Kills His Wife, Her Father and Himself.

CLEVELAND, O., July 22.—At Edgerton, O., yesterday morning Hiram Hoadley, Jr., shot and killed his wife and her father, a farmer named Newman, and then killed himself. Hoadley's wife had applied for a divorce and was living with her parents. Hoadley lay in wait for his wife as she went out to the barn to milk the cows and shot her down. Newman, hearing the report, ran to his daughter's aid and received a bullet in the breast.

Wanted a Third Victim.

Hoadley then went to the house and tried to kill his mother-in-law, failing in which he returned to the barn, lay down beside his wife's body, and put a bullet in his head. He had three revolvers on his person, and it is thought he intended to murder the entire Newman family.

The Salt Trust.

CHICAGO, July 22.—The Times this morning prints a double column advertisement of the "North American Salt Company," capital $11,000,000. The prospectus says the object of the company is to acquire the control of nearly all the salt properties on the North American continent, and which embrace seven-eighths of the total annual production, including 130 different works. The purpose of the company, so the prospectus says, is to do away with wasteful systems of production, manufacture and distribution, and return the owner a fair profit while selling the salt at a reasonable price. The salt trust is undoubtedly with us.

Fleeced Him Out of $2,000.

HILLDALE, Mich., July 20.—John W. Johnson, a wealthy farmer living two miles south of this city, was fleeced out of $2,000 Friday afternoon by three-card monte men. They got him to come to town and draw the money from the First National bank, and then euchred him out of it. They immediately started for the Ohio line, and nothing has been heard of them yet, although the officers are after them.

Arrest of an Embezzler.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 20.—J. F. Edwards, who is charged with having embezzled $40,000 from a Wisconsin mining company in 1884, has been arrested at San Diego.

We notice a new departure in the treatment of disease that promises to revolutionize the medicine business. It consists in the collection of the species used by noted specialists of Europe and America, and bringing them within the reach of all. For instance, the treatment pursued by special physicians who treat indigestion, stomach and liver troubles only, was obtained and prepared. The treatments of other physicians, celebrated for curing catarrh, were procured, and so on till these incomparable cures now include diseases of the lungs, kidneys, female weakness, rheumatism, nervous debility, and piles. Originated and used by specialists, being a positive cure for each disease, these preparations are the best remedies procurable. We advise all to send three two cent stamps to the Chase Medical Specialty Co., 179 West Adams St., Chicago, Ill., and receive by return mail their interesting hand book.

PILES! PILES! PILES!

Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment is the only sure cure for Blind, Bleeding or Itching Piles ever discovered. It never fails to cure old chronic cases of long standing.

Judge Coons, Maysville, Ky., says: "Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment cured me after years of suffering."

HOW CAN PARENTS

allow their children to cough and strain and cough and calmly say "Oh! it is only a little cold," and keep giving them cheap and dangerous medicines, until they are down with lung fever or consumption, when they can be so easily relieved by BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP? It has no superior, and few equals. J. J. ORR, Druggist.

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No! medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

J. J. ORR Druggist.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we receive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

WRITING MACHINE CABINET and OFFICE DESK

For Remington, Hammond, and Crancall Type Writer.

The advantages of this Type writer and Office Desk over all other so-called Combination Cabinets, are:

First.—The ease and simplicity with which the desk is changed from a Library or Office Desk to a Typewriter Table. This change is effected by pushing the lid covering the machine back in the rear of cabinet—it being a roller top—removing it entirely from sight, thus overcoming the objectionable board and sounder in front of the operator. The movable top is perfectly flat, is of size covered, and forms a complete writing desk when the machine is not in use. The table on which the machine rests is so evenly balanced by our patent adjustments that it needs but a slight touch to bring the machine in position.

Second.—The advantages of the swinging table are: The table is so balanced near its center on patent malleable iron arms, that when the machine brought in place for use, it does not depend on ropes or hangers at rear of platform for support, but is held rigidly in place by its own weight, making it impossible for the machine to be tumbled down an incline in back of desk by the breaking of a rear support. The machine rests on patent slides which keeps the machine in place, and can be drawn out beyond the desk, well under the operator's hand.

Third.—The construction of the lid closing machine space makes it air tight, and the table having felt around its boarders thoroughly protects the machine from dust.

Fourth.—The foot rest and the construction of the table adjustments makes the desk as ridged as though the top was one solid board, which is a matter of great importance where a solid type-writing table is required. No operator can do good work on a shaky table.

Lastly.—The cabinet is a splendid piece of cabinet work. We manufacture them in Walnut, Antique Oak, Natural Oak, Natural Cherry, Cherry imitation, Mahogany and Ash.

Agents wanted to sell these cabinets, and where we have no agencies established we will sell direct from our works at wholesale prices.

Dairy Column.

Edited by the Bureau of Dairy Information
CHICAGO, ILL.

For the encouragement of improved methods of Dairying. Information upon all matters relating to the manufacture of butter and cheese and handling of milk will be given in answer to questions mailed to the Bureau at above address.

DAIRY EDUCATION.

If the reading of the DAIRY COLUMN does not awake in you an appetite for more extensive dairy reading, I shall consider the COLUMN a failure to a very great extent; and is most of you do not only value your local paper more for it, but also subscribe to one or two good dairy papers, I shall be highly disapointed. I am quite willing to grant that part of what is written in the papers may be more or less theories and some of these even false theories; but is not a good and true theory better than a wrong practice? And it is your privilege and duty to sift all that you read in the sieve of your own common sense; and if you do not trust your own judgement, it will not be long before some practical dairyman will attack any falce theories The price of these papers is so low (you get the best one, Hoard's Dairyman, Fort atkinson, Wis., for $1 a year) that if you will read them carefully and thoughtfully you will in one month get pointers worth twice the subscription.

But I do not consider you have done your whole duty in taking and reading a dairy paper: you should also—whenever you feel the spirit move you—overcome our common failing: lack of energy, and write your opinion, your ideas, "your experience."

So much for that branch of dairy education; the next is the attendance at dairy conventions. This is an excellent school, but rather more expensive, as it means loss of several days work, carfares and hotel bills; and yet, I have met several dairy farmers who traveled quite a distance and asserted that it paid them well. The membership fee is $1, and for this you get a report of the proceedings. My experience that while some excellent papers are read and a very lively and instructive discussion may be heard at the regular session, the most valuable information is picked up outside the sessions—in the little groups of members gathered at the hotels and elsewhere. Many of the best practical men will express their views there freely, while theyfeel diffident about expressing themselves in the hall. But right here let me call your attention to the fact, that if you hear an opinion expsessed in the hall which your experience contradicts, and you keep silent, you neglect your duty as a member and as a good dairyman—your silence means consent to the opinion expressed. say what you have got to say as short and condensed as possible and do not deverge from the subject under discussion.

If your time, your cash, or other reasons prevent you from going to the state dairymen's convention, there is no excuse for not attending the institute in your country, and there you will find some time devoted to the dairy, though not as much as I could wish. And if you unhappily live in a state where there are no institutes at all, you may meet with your neighbors and freely discuss your difficulties with them. I entreat you to layaside that foolish pride of believing that you (or your wife) make the best butter, or if you really do make it, that you cannot learn something from somebody else, even though their butter is inferior to yours. I entreat you, do not believe that your trade is hert by your neighbors making as good butter as you—quite the reverse. Prof. Robertson, the Canadian cheese expert, said truly the other day: "Every pound of poor cheese spoils the sale of 3 pounds of good cheese." Supposing a few of you only make good butter and all the rest poor, your interest will be to endicate them to make as good butter as you. Why? Because your store keeper will then be able to send to market a large lot of uniform good butter and thus obtain a higher price for your butter than if it was shipped together with a lot of indifferent and bad quality; now mark you, this is not theory, but facts, and if you don't believe me ask any butter dealer in any large market.

It is a short-sighted policy to keep secret your methods, and if you do it you will lose many a good pointer from the very men whom you—in your real or fancied superiority—despised.

If your sell your butter through a commission man, you have still another means of education, you must throw away your pride and your distrust of him. Instead of accusing him of stealing when he reports short weight, see if you have not left too much brine in your butter. Ask him to give you this reason why your butter does not get the top price, and if you act upon this suggestion you will find it an excellent school—this school, where you score reports are emphasized by dollars and cents.

In Europe, even where there are no dairy schools, no dairymen are considered fully competent unless they have served a systematic apprenticeship—one year without any wages and the second for small wages.

Here this would be too light pay, but it would pay our farmer's daughters well to offer their services free for 6 months at a noted dairy in order to learn the business.

With the means at hand you have plenty of chances to educate yourself to a higher plane in the dairy, but I hope before long to be able to tell you about American dairy schools in every state. New York is planning for four, and the other states are sure to follow suit.

Mr. Forster, the superintendent of Cork butter market, told me that he could trace a considerable improvement in the average quality of butter after the Munster Dairy Schools had graduated 500 pupils. But do not expect that education, (even if the state does erect dairy schools), will fly into your mouth like a roast pigeon, without any exertion by yourself.

No Danger.

How Romulus White Was Deceived.

"Human natur' is powerfully deceptive, ain't she?" queried the old man, after we had been silent for some time.

"Sometimes."

"You bet she is! I'm a living in the village of R——, forty miles down the road. I've got a gal named Mollie. She's about as dandy a country gal as you'll find in the state. Last winter a stranger struck the town, and at once fell in love with Mollie. I didn't like his looks, and I said to the gal:

"'Mollie, beware of that chap. I kin read him like a book, and I tell you he hain't honest nor honorable. I'll bet a wheat stack to a pumpkin that he's a sharper.'

"The gal differed with me, and about a month ago they were married."

"And how did the husband turn out?"

"Mighty honorable sort of a man. I was clean mistaken in him. They had been married three days when along came a woman from Dunkirk and claimed him and showed a certificate. I expected he would deny her, but he didn't. Owned right up like a little man. She was still there when a second one came on from Oswego. Looked bilious for my new son-in-law, and I looked to see him flunk, but he didn't. Jist acknowledged the corn and said he was willing to do the fair thing."

"And how did it end?"

"They had him arrested for bigamy. They wanted us to go agin him, too, but when I mentioned it to him he said:

"'Father, don't do it. Here's my watch and $60, and they are yours if you don't.'"

"And you didn't?"

"No. He was a-tryin' to do the squar' thing, and when a man tries to do the squar' thing by Romulus White I can't go back on him. I gin the gal the money and I kept the watch, and I guess we couldn't have done better."—New York Sun.

The Vermont Microscopical Association has just announced that a prize of $250, given by the Wells & Richardson Co., the well-known chemists, will be paid to the first discoverer of a new disease germ. The wonderful discovery by Prof. Koch of the cholera germ, as the cause of cholera, stimulated great research throughout the world and it is believed this liberal prize, offered by a house of such standing, will greatly assist in the detection of micro-organisms that are the direct cause of disease and death. All who are interested in the subject and the conditions of this prize, should write to C. Smith Boynton, M. D. Sec'y of the Association, Burlington, Vt.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucus surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease and giving the patient strength, by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. IN GOLDEN PASTURES.

MILLIONS ON MILLIONS OF DOLLARS WORTH OF FINE STOCK.

The Grandest Stock Display Ever Seen in the West—Magnificent Exhibition Preparing for Farmers and Stock Breeders.

The northwest has become within a few years past one of the most noted, if not the most noted, stock breeding sections of the Union, particularly for breeding farm stock—breeds of horses especially for farm work and teaming; breeds of cattle especially for butter, other breeds especially for beef, and others for working oxen; breeds of sheep for wool and other breeds for mutton; and breeds of hogs for the production of the best and most profitable pork. The old time farmers would have laughed at the notion of breeding a special class of horses for farm work, or a special class of cows for butter. Times were when the only idea of improved horses was trotters or racers for the track or road. Any mongrel was good enough for farm work. And the best cattle were "all round," equally for butter, beef and work, instead of a special breed for each.

"BEFORE THE WAR"

the northwest bred some noted trotting and running horses. But the breeding of Percherons, Clydesdales, Shire, French draft and French coach horses for work is a business that has developed since the war. So also is the rearing of sheep from costly flocks of the best blood in Europe, and cattle from the best herds not only of Great Britain but of all the countries of Europe. The northwest now has dozens of stock farms and scores of stock breeders with reputations that cover the whole continent, and animals that command princely prices. Such Michigan names as those of William Ball, of Hamburg; James M. Turner, of Lansing; Savage & Farnum, of Detroit, and other noted Michigan breeders are known and honored in all countries where there are herd books, stud books or flock registers, and Ohio and Indiana can boast of many of the same sort. In proportion to her farming, population and her suitable area, of the states and of all countries on this half of the globe as a stock raising state. By the last census the value of Michigan live stock reached the enormous aggregate proportion and value of one-tenth of her entire farm property, or about fifty-six millions of dollars! Only nine states surpassed Michigan in the number of horses, eight in oxen, ten in milch cows, and three in sheep; and each of these states was either larger in suitable cultivated area, older in the business, greater in population and wealth, or with peculiar advantages of climate and soil. The next census is confidently expected to show such an enormous advance in Michigan stock raising as will make her supremacy self-evident.

MICHIGAN STANDS AT THE HEAD

Popular interest in stock raising, stock improvement, and stock exhibitions is constantly and rapidly increasing, as are also the number and proportions of investments of capital in the business of stock raising of improved breeds. And skill in developing the finest animals is naturally acquired by practice and experience. Most of the various classes of stock breeders have fairs, meetings and exhibitions. They also lend an important part to county, district and state fairs. Sheep shearing festivals and flock shows are common and popular, and show a gratifying annual increase in the number of the best animals with accredited pedigrees. Progress in rearing Jersey, Alderney, Durham, Devon, Dutch Belted, Holstein Freisen, Hereford, polled and other choice varieties of cattle, is also marked and gratifying. While there are no especial shows of improved swine, except at fairs, the number and quality of the most famous breeds are steadily increasing, and the original razor-backed mongrel hog of the early farmers has almost disappeared. But, while stock breeders have displayed many excellent exhibits at fairs and festivals, they have

NEVER HAD AN ADEQUATE EXHIBITION.

At the county, district and state fairs the usual custom has necessarily been to provide stock with limited quarters in unsightly rough board sheds and stalls, strewn with litter, ill-smelling, unattractive, inconvenient and dirty. Cattle and horses have been generally led or driven about a ring that is often foul with mud or cloudy with dust, and the people, momentarily attracted, are presently driven off to more agreeable and cleanly exhibits. Trotting and racing stock have been given the best chances for attractive display, and therefore naturally have occupied the most popular attention. Besides, the local and state fairs have not drawn together enough exhibits of stock from other states and Canada to afford liberal opportunities for comparisons that will accomplish the most good for home breeders. The fair managers have made commendable efforts but they have not been provided with enough capital to furnish first class facilities for stock shows.

The great International Exposition, to be held in Detroit on September 17-27, will afford the stock breeders, farmers and people the first really adequate opportunity for not only of their splendid improved stock of Michigan, but also of numerous and valuable exhibits from the best flocks and herds of Canada and the other states. The stock buildings will be of immense size, elegant, clean, carefully regulated and kept, lighted by electricity, thoroughly watered and provided with every appliance even to the point of luxury, and so arranged that the stock show will be as attractive as possible to the immense crowds of visitors, and a pleasure even to the most delicate ladies. The display ground will be ample, will be separate from other and disturbing exhibits, and will be in continued use, so that at all hours an exhibition of fine stock will be going on alike upon the display ground and in the stalls, stables and pens. It will undoubtedly be the grandest exhibition of powerful horses and splendid cattle ever seen in the northwest, with scenes constantly realizing Rosa Bonheur's world-famous picture of "The Horse Fair." And the display of sheep and swine will be no less extraordinary. The farmers have never had such an opportunity, and will no doubt take advantage of it by thousands, and reap a benefit from it that will add greatly to their business interests for many years to come. And the managers of fairs will learn valuable lessons as to the best methods for securing, caring for and displaying farm stock.

Besides there will be a splendid display of pacing and road horses, and exciting speed contests upon a specially excellent track, so that horses of all classes will be amply provided for. The business energy, enterprise and vast outlay of capital necessary to produce such an exhibition constitutes a public benefit which deserves wide recognition.

THE CIRCUS.

What the Bill Boards Display—The Truth About It.

The man who designs the works of art that decorate the bill boards throughout the United States at this season of the year should have been consulted before the first menagerie was made to order for Adam and Eve and turned loose in the garden of Eden.

LEVY STRONG-HOLD IN HIS NOSE BALANCING ACT.

He could have given valuable pointers about the proper proportions of the various animals, and would have added to the collection beasts and birds and reptiles which could now be used to advantage.

The circus artist is a wonderful man, with a phenomenal size of imagination and a supreme contempt for facts. He looks with disdain upon the modern realistic school of art. He has no use for realism. The circus artist probably knows his business. For many, many years he has been drawing pictures of elephants forty feet high tramping their way majestically through scenes of Oriental splendor. Five generations have stood with glaring eyes and open mouths before these great works of the lithographer's art. They have patronized each succeeding circus, and swallowed the rising lump of disappointment occasioned by the discovery that the seventy-five foot giraffe could stand erect in a seven foot cage. One hundred years from now it will be the same.

No man looks at the bill boards after the circus has left town. As he passes by he looks the other way. It is a matter of regret that the circus is so far behind the progress made by the artist and the advance agent. The advance agent is a talented gentleman, with an enthusiastic temperament. As the circus becomes more and more antiquated the advance agent grows more eloquent. He announces that all former achievements will be cast in the shade; that the colossal aggregation is grander than ever and that the price of admission will not be increased. The circus artist is equal to the occasion. He designs a new elephant, with a trunk thirty feet in length, and draws a vivid representation of a life and death fight between the wild yat of Patagonia and a company of sailors who have stepped ashore from a man-of-war.

"LA TASCOT," THE HUMAN FLY, DIVING INTO A NET.

The Chicago Herald presents a series of pictures, reduced from photographs, depicting actual scenes in one of the greatest aggregations ever exhibited beneath canvas. Their accuracy will not be questioned by those who have visited the circus recently. Reference is made to the spirited drawing of "La Tascot, the Human Fly," in her daring act of diving into a net. The artist has evidently made a mistake in his perspective, for as the picture is drawn the suggestion that the stakes are too short forces itself on all who make a critical analysis of this spirited sketch. The "La Tascot" on the bill boards is a far prettier female, but her face lacks the decision and character portrayed in the original. Many are disappointed that the dive is not made head first, as per advertisement, but this feeling soon passes away.

The artist has shown Signeor Kelly in the star act of the evening. Signeor Kelly is the champion "bear-buck" rider of the world. Those not acquainted with the dangers which surround the life of a circus performer may fail to properly appreciate the risk taken by Signeor Kelly in the feat undertaken by him as shown in the sketch. There is a chance that the upright so firmly grasped by the rider may break or pull out. What would become of the unfortunate man? He would be dashed to the sawdust track. Then, again, the horse might drop dead. Those not in the business have no right to criticise, but it is hard to keep out of one's mind the recollection of a scene shown on the bill boards, where a flying horse dashes around the great ring, carrying on his back a graceful rider, whose toes seem hardly to touch the galloping steed.

SIGNOR KELLY, THE BEAR-BUCK RIDER.

There is no use in kicking because the man who was advertised to turn thirteen times over twelve large elephants simply jumps off of a springboard and turns a somersault over one solitary, melancholy pachyderm with a far away look in his off eye. Not half of the people in the vast audience would dare to perform that act.

But in spite of all these petty disappointments it is everlasting fun to see the circus.

A Sister in Name Only.

Mrs. Parvenu—Mr. Travis, you know everybody. Who is that pretty girl over there, sitting on the divan?

Mr. Travis—That is one of my sisters, Mrs. Parvenu.

Mrs. Parvenu—Indeed! You don't look as if you belonged to the same family.

Mr. Travis (sadly)—No, and we never shall.—Burlington Free Press.

Why Should I Go to Montana?

Great Reservation. Because 18,000,000 acres of free government land, with a delightful climate and equally suited for general farming and stock raising, have just been opened to the homeseeker, in the Milk River valley and near Penton and Great Falls.

Stock Raising. Because the favorable climate and superior grasses of Montana make it the natural home of horses, cattle, sheep and other domestic animals; and because winter feeding is not required, as stock grazes at large the year around.

General Farming. Because a rich soil and abundant summer rains produce wheat, oats, rye, barley, and the grasses and vegetables of a quality, size and yield unsurpassed.

Mining. Because Montana produces more of the precious metals than any other state or territory, and abundant opportunities remain to secure valuable properties at nominal cost

Immigration. Because the Great Reservation is the meeting point of settlers from the Pacific Coast and from the Eastern States and is the only extensive tract of good land left, suitable for settlement.

Business. Because the rapidly growing towns along the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. offer splendid opportunities to engage in business Manufacture. Because the 1,000,000 horse-power water power at Great Falls, the extensive coal veins, the wool, mineral and grain raising resources of Montana offer exceptional opportunities to the manufacturer.

Tourist. Because the canon of the Gates of the Montains, the Great Falls of the Missouri, the Giant Fountain and Continental Divide offer the most sublime and diversified scenery to be found on the Continent. Take a summer tour.

Why Travel by the St. P., M. & M.? Because only by it can you travel through the largest body of free land left for settlement. Because it reaches the Great Falls, with the largest water power on the continent. Because it reaches Helena, the richest city of its size in the world, and because it is the shortest and best route to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth. Special tourists' and landseekers' rates. Daily trains through solid to Montana. Choice of three routes to the Pacific coast. Find out all about it, by writing for "The Great Reservation," and "Tourists' Summer Guide." For further information, rates, maps etc., apply to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. A. Saturday night as Burt Lawton, who is working for W. R. Wilson, was returning from taking his best girl home from Tecumseh, was run into by Henry Barnes, who was coming from Tecumseh. Burt's horse after being unhitched, ran away, making a circuit through T. H. Temple's dooryard, Taft's cornfield and dooryard, Chas. Hart's yard into the road, leaving every fence a complete wreck; also smashing T. H. Temple's well-curb. When the horse was caught she was fast in the lines near Mr. Wilson's barn. The harness was completely riddled, but the net was not hurt. The horse received several scratches and cuts, the worst being on the front leg, and the under lip was cut quite badly. Dr. Chas. Waldron took several stitches in the wounds and she is getting along nicely. The damage to the buggies is slight. Mr. Lawton was bruised by being thrown against the fence when the horse first started. The accident was caused on account of being so dark and stormy that they did not see each other.

Question: Resolved, That monopoly and aristocracy make anarchy.

Mr. and Mrs. Ezra Simmons took in the Detroit races last week.

Wednesday the 24th inst. a party of thirteen little girls remembered that it was the thirteenth birthday of their sick little schoolmate, Louie Langdon. Each carried some pretty token of her love and sympathy for the afflicted child whose strength is so surely slipping away. A handsome gift from the mother and kind remembrances from other friends made it a red letter day for the weary child.

Mrs. Joe Herbison, who has been ill some time, has nearly recovered her usual health, which is never good, under the efficient care of her daughter, Mrs. Pease of Owosso. Mrs. H. has just received a letter from her son John, who owns 300 or 400 acres of land in Edmonds Co., Dakota, stating that the crops are very fine and the rain fall too abundant for haying.

Mr. Luce's broken limb is mending slowly; he is able to be about some on crutches; just now at intervals, it is giving him very severe pains which he thinks are rheumatic. His commodious new house is now ready for the plasterers and a fine improvement to the Chicago pike.

A letter from Seward Co. Neb. says: "We are having lots of rain since the 11th. Lots of hay and small grain spoiled."

Mrs. May Wisner has been measuring her fuchsia recently and finds it to be eight instead of six feet in heighth and it bears 120 buds and blossoms, and only a year from the slip. Mrs. W. has always been very successful with the fuchsia, but this beats them all.

We have been permitted to make a few extracts from a letter from Mrs. Philena Hathaway, late of Hudson, now with her sister in Seattle, W. T., in regard to the great fire at that place. She says: "Yes, we escaped the terrible fire; we are on the hill; the wind took the fire toward the bay; had it brought it this way we should not have escaped, or had the gas works gone, which all feared, we should have gone too. The men fought bravely and saved them; they are in the third block below us. The papers have not exaggerated it in the least, have hardly told it as bad as it was; it was just terrible. Seattle people hardly realize as yet what a great calamity it is. To-day the lower portion of the town is a city of tents. It has affected everybody; hundreds are thrown out of employment. It has stopped the cable cars on Jackson street so we have to wade through the dust and climb hills wherever we go."

A terrible accident occurred on Friday of last week resulting in the death of the little year and a half old daughter of Wm. Osborn. Some hot ashes had just been put in the fire box and a few moments afterward the screams of the child were heard and she was found enveloped in flames. Her death occurred on Saturday morning and the remains were interred in the Tipton cemetery on Tuesday of this week—the delay being on account of Mrs. Osborn's friends who live at a distance.

WEST POINT and ANNAPOLIS.

To the boys of the 2d Congressional District:

I shall hold a competitive examination at the High School building in the city of Adrian on Tuesday, Aug. 6th, at 9 o'clock a. m., to determine whom I shall send to West Point and Annapolis, respectively, as cadets. There is a vacancy existing in each of these schools at present, to be filled from this district.

The successful candidate for West Point must be not less than 17 nor more than 22 years of age in June, 1890, and the candidate for the Naval Academy must be not less than 15 nor more than 20 years of age Sept. 1st next.

The examinations will be in reading spelling, arithmetic, English grammar, descriptive geography and history of the U. S., beside such other elementary branches as the examining board may see fit to take up. Candidates must be physically sound, and a thorough examination by your physician would save disappointment from being rejected by the physician who will examine you at Adrian.

Blood vs. Nerves.

Great mistakes have been made in the world, by supposing many nervous troubles were due to bad blood. Thus headache, fits, dizziness, sleeplessness, etc., are always due to weakness or irritation of the nerves of the brain; dyspepsia, pain, wind, etc. to weakness of the nerves of the stomach; weak lungs is caused by weakness of the parts; billiousness, constipation, etc. to weakness of the nerves of the liver or bowels; pains, irregularity, sterility to derangement of the uterine nerves. For all weakness, Dr. Miles' great nerve and brain food surpasses all other remedies. Trial bottle free at Baker & Hall's Drug Store.

SUSPECT BURKE HAS MONEY.

Chicago Officials on the Trail of His Banker—A Writ of Habeas Corpus.

CHICAGO, July 25.—Ever since Martin Burke was arrested in Winnipeg and began his fight against extradition Judge Longenecker and Chief of Police Hubbard have been puzzled as to where the money came from to enable him to hire expensive lawyers. Yesterday it was learned from Assistant State's Attorney Baker that a man known to be a close personal friend of a prominent Clan-na-Gael leader in Chicago appeared in Winnipeg Saturday night. Monday morning Burke's lawyer ordered a copy of the record in the extradition proceedings, and announced that he would make application for a writ of habeas corpus. A large sum of money was required for the move, and there was no intimation before Monday that it would be forthcoming.

The Chicago detectives in Winnipeg and Chief Hubbard's force are working hard to find out just what the connection is between the arrival of the Chicagoan and the beginning of legal proceedings, and are hoping for great things.

Habeas Corpus for Burke.

WINNIPEG, Man., July 25.—In the case of Martin Burke, the Cronin murder suspect, an application was made yesterday morning for a writ of habeas corpus. After arguments of the prisoner's counsel the judge granted the writ.

HENNESSY MUST GO BACK.

He Came Here Under Contract to Work, and Violates the Law.

WASHINGTON CITY, July 27.—The secretary of the treasury Friday decided an interesting question arising under the alien contract labor. It seems that Irving & Sellers, merchants of England, who have a branch house in New York city, recently discharged the bookkeeper in their New York house, an American named James T. Watson, and sent over a bookkeeper in the home office, named Edward F. Hennessy, to take his place. Watson complained to the collector at New York, and the result was that when Hennessy arrived at that port the collector refused to allow him to land, on the ground that it would be a violation of the contract labor law.

A Violation of the Law.

An appeal was taken to the secretary of the treasury and he instructed the collector to allow Hennessy to land on giving bond in the sum of $400 for his return in case it was decided that he came within the prohibitory class. The question was referred to the solicitor of the treasury, and that officer gave an opinion that as Hennessy had clearly come to this country under a contract to labor, his landing would be a palpable violation of law. The secretary coincided in this opinion, and instructed the collector at New York to compel Hennessy to return to England.

Counterfeiter Arrested.

SULLIVAN, Ills., July 27.—A United States marshal arrived here Friday from Springfield and arrested Joe and Lewis Freeman for making and passing counterfeit silver coin. The parties are brothers and lived on their farms about seven miles from this city. A few months ago Irau Berry, a neighbor of the Freemans, while felling some trees on their property found some molds for the making of small silver coin with other evidences of illegal work. He at once made his discoveries known to State's Attorney Jennings, and he in turn to the United States grand jury, whose investigations resulted as above.

BURDETTE'S PHILOSOPHY.

THE WORKINGS OF THE INFANT MIND.

Thomas Jefferson, when about 4 years old, was playing with his blocks one day, when the sound of an infant sister came drifting in from the distant nursery. "It seems to me," remarked the infant statesman, pausing in his childish labor, "for a baby it strikes me, that Anna Maria is making her base on bawls." "But," interposes the hypercritical reader, "Thomas Jefferson had no sister Anna Maria, and baseball and its slang were unknown in his time." Yes, all that I know; but I agree with Mr. Howells that in a novel dealing with modern life "a plot of close texture is not only unnecessary, but is an anachronism." "But," you say, "the infancy of Thomas Jefferson is not a feature of modern life." No, goosey, but baseball is. Go, get thee to a kindergarten, and learn the simple canons of criticism.

THIS KIND HAS SOME TRUTH IN IT.

"What have you there?" demanded the editor, with smoldering fire in his eye, "an article on the late war?" "No, indeed," replied the distinguished contributor, for it was he, "it is an article on the next war." "I will gladly accept it," replied the editor, "because that is something which you probably know something about, and the people will be glad to get hold of bottom facts which cannot be denied or disproved by all the rest of the participants. Here is a check for $500 a page; count the pages, add up the check, and get the cash on it yourself. Nay, do not thank me." Adding in a strained, hoarse voice, as the distinguished contributor goes down the winding stair, "You will not, when you go to cash the check."

THAT KEEPS HIM QUIET.

A correspondent wants some hints on how to train a dog. Well, about as good a way as any is to train him as you do a morning glory vine—with a tight cord to a high hook. He will never bark if you train him this way. O, yes, and be sure you bury him deep enough so that drought will not affect him. Then he can't help being a good dog. He's gone good.

MOUTH AND THE MAN I SING

I love the man who knows it all,
From east to west, from north to south;
Who knows all things, both great and small,
And tells it with his tireless mouth;
Who holds a listening world in awe,
The while he works his iron jaw

Ofttimes in evening's holy calm
When twilight softens sight and sound,
And zephyr breathes a peaceful psalm,
This fellow brings his mouth around,
With its long gallop that can tire
The eight day clock's impatient ire.

His good strong mouth! He wields it well!
He works it just for all it's worth;
Not Samson's jawbone famed could tell
Such mighty deeds upon the earth.
He pulls the throttle open wide,
And works her hard on either side.

Up hill and down, through swamp and sand,
It never stops, it never balks;
Through air and sky, o'er sea and land,
He talks, and talks, and talks, and talks,
And talks, and talks, and talks, and talks,
And talks, and talks, and talks, and talks,

Good Lord, from evils fierce and dire,
Save us each day—from fear and woe;
From wreck and flood, from storm and fire,
From sudden death, from secret foe;
From blighting rain and burning drouth—
And from the man who plays his mouth.

—Brooklyn Eagle.

SUGGESTIONS BY A LUNATIC.

A forlorn imbecile, who had been expelled from the asylum for frivolity, came in to suggest that on Arbor day the planting of trees be observed with some regard to what the poor creature called, with a hoarse chestnut chuckle, the external fitness of things. For instance, he said, we should plant before the saloons the hic o'rye; at the kitchen door, young ashes; in the zoological garden, the fur; at the home of the married man, the yoke; in the school yards, the yell'em, and in— At this point, however, a bolt of vengeance as large as a boot fell upon the offender like a peal of banana from a cloudless sky and carried him away as with a thud. Not the dull, sickening kind, but one of the long drawn, such as usually heard in the dead of night, when wearied people yawn and the patient evening caller waits to hear the ever welcome breakfast bell.

RIGHT IN THE SWIM.

"Do you call on the Trippleplates, Mrs. Commoner?" "No; that is, I have never called. I hear my husband say that he calls there quite frequently, two or three times a week." "Why, I don't"— "You see, he's out of employment just now, and is collecting hard bills for Grub & Grozer." "Oh!" "Yes, oh."

A Difficulty About Witnesses.

"Mr. Smith," said the electric light manager to his foreman, "we want some men to testify to the absolute harmlessness of the electric light current as used by us. You might send Roberts"—

Foreman—He was killed while fixing a wire last night, sir.

"Well, Jackson will do, then."

"He accidentally grounded a wrong wire last week, and is scarcely expected to live, sir."

"Such awkwardness. Send Williams."

"Sorry, sir, but he was paralyzed while fixing an electric lamp on Thursday."

"Really! It's most annoying. Employ some new men at once, and send them to testify to the committee before they have time to get themselves killed."—New York Herald.

A Disagreeable Feature.

Friend (to theatrical acquaintance)—No doubt there are a great many disagreeable things connected with the theatrical profession!

Actor—Yes, indeed.

Friend—What do you find to be most disagreeable?

Actor—The way in which the railroad ties are made. They are either too far apart or too near together for comfortable pedestrianism.—Yankee Blade.

Brief.

Kooponn—By the way, Bonds, what caused the decline in your bank shares today—dividend off?

Bonds (laconically)—No, cashier.—Life.

A Natural Question.

"The captain was as cool as a cucumber when the vessel struck the iceberg."

"How was the iceberg?"—Harper's Bazar.

An Easy Fit.

"Now, Daffy, do it seem to fit?"

"Yes, um; it seem to fit splendid; I kin jes wabble my foot all 'round in it."—Harper's Bazar.

Boulanger's Waterloo

France Rather Gives Him the Cold Shoulder.

HIS FRIENDS FEEL MELANCHOLY.

Out of 550 Cantons Heard from He Only Carries Twelve—Parisian Crowds Much Excited and the General's Adherents Fighting Mad—Marriage of the Daughter of the Prince of Wales—A Fearful Calamity in Hungary—Hundreds Killed.

PARIS, July 29.—The elections for the councils general were held throughout France yesterday. Boulanger contested 451 cantons out of the 1,439. He was returned in Bordeaux by a vote of 3,316 to 2,691. He was defeated in Montpelier and Rouen.

Returns are in for 550 cantons. Of these Boulanger has carried but twelve in all. The streets about the newspaper offices were crowded with people anxious for the news, but what has been so far received is generally accepted as indicating a disastrous defeat for Boulanger. The hopes of his adherents are at zero.

Very Much Excited Crowds.

The crowds which eagerly scanned the bulletins for news last night, parading restlessly back and forth to vary the monotony of waiting, were made up of all shades of political opinion, and as there was neither hesitation nor moderation in the free expression of opinions, brawls and violent scenes were frequent. The police were out in full force, and only their restraining influence prevented a serious conflict between the opposing partisans, which the Boulangists seemed to be axious to precipitate.

Warning to the General.

Yesterday the time expired within which Boulanger, Dillon and Rochefort were summoned to answer before the high court of the senate the charges against them. The accused, having failed to respond, the decree of the court was read before the residence of each yesterday ordering them to appear within ten days, and in the event of their failing so to do sequestrating their property and depriving them of their civil rights.

MARRIAGE OF PRINCESS LOUISE.

A Popular Wedding Because the Groom Was a Briton.

LONDON, July 29.—The one topic of conversation and of newspaper interest is the marriage which was solemnized at noon Saturday in the private chapel of Buckingham palace. It has been a long time since so popular an event has taken place in England, and it is safe to say that every one, from the throne to the lowest commoner, is satisfied with the match that gives the daughter of perhaps the best loved woman in the kingdom to a British subject, against whom so little can be alleged. The wedding itself passed off without a hitch, as is usual with affairs whose programmes have been previously arranged with great care and precision.

The Sun Shone on the Bride.

The morning was gloomy, and quite up to the hour of the ceremony rain was falling, but the sunshine came out in the afternoon and brightened the wedding day with its radiance, so the old saying "Happy is the bride the sun shines upon" was fulfilled, after all. It was a great disappointment to the many friends of the Prince and Princess of Wales that the chapel selected for the ceremony was so small, as the number who could enter was restricted to the immediate entourage of the royal households.

The Princess Spoke Right Out.

Princess Louise was calm and bore herself well. She did not flinch one iota, and answered the questions put to her by the archbishop of Canterbury out of the ritual of the church distinctly and without faltering. The groom, now duke of Fife, was radiant. It was noticed that in passing the queen he bowed reverentially. The most disturbed and nervous of all was the usually imperturbable Prince of Wales. He became exceedingly nervous as the time approached for him to give the bride away. However, he managed his part with much grace. The queen was bright, and looked greatly pleased. She exhibited no sign of her reported recent indisposition.

A Lunch at Buckingham Palace.

After the ceremony was concluded the guests lunched at Buckingham palace with the queen. When the wedding breakfast was over the royal party returned to Marlborough house. From here the newly married couple went Saturday evening to East Suenne house, the earl of Fife's suburban seat, where the couple will spend the honeymoon.

When Gladstone entered the chapel he reverently knelt down and prayed, as is his wont. Saturday night the groom gave a grand banquet to the employes of Scott's bank, of which he is a partner.

Emperor William of Germany did not send any wedding present to the Princess Louise. The omission is greatly commented upon.

FRIGHTFUL DISASTER IN HUNGARY.

Hundreds of People Killed and Wounded by a Cyclone.

VIENNA, July 29.—A terrific cyclone swept over portions of Hungary, Transylvania, and Bukovina yesterday, taking in a tract several thousand square miles in extent in its pathway. The ruin wrought by the visitation is terrible. Hundreds of people have been killed, and a great many more have been maimed and crippled. All crops in the path of the cyclone are a total loss, and houses and churches are leveled to the ground in all directions.

A Big New York Firm in Trouble.

NEW YORK, July 25.—The Tribune says the firm of Lewis Bros. & Co., one of the largest dry goods commission houses in New York, is embarrassed and will probably be compelled to make an assignment. Their liabilities are said to reach nearly $4,000,000, but it seems to be the opinion of the "trade" that their embarrassment is only temporary.

Shortly after 2 o'clock Thursday afternoon the assignment of Lewis Bros. & Co., the great dry goods firm of Worth and Thomas streets, was filed in the county clerk's office. The assignee is Cornelius N. Bliss, and there are no preferences to any person. The assignment was executed in Philadelphia.

Feeding Hungry Miners.

CHICAGO, July 27.—Mayor Cregier, Congressman Lawler, and several other gentlemen conveyed another stock of provisions to the destitute miners in the northern Illinois strike region yesterday. There were two carloads and the point at which they were distributed was Spring Valley. Upon arrival there they were met by a large crowd which cheered enthusiastically. The food was turned over to the relief committee and the scenes attending the distribution thereof were very affecting.

Forced to Leave Home.

Over 60 people were forced to leave there homes yesterday to call for a free trial package of Lane's Family Medicine. If your blood is bad, your liver and kidneys out of order, if you are constipated and have headache and an unsightly complexion, don't fail to call on any druggist to-day for a free sample of this grand remedy. The ladies praise it. Everyone likes it. Large size package 50 cents.

YOU CANNOT AFFORD

At this season of the year to be without a good reliable diarrhœa balsam in the house, as cramps, colic, diarrhœa and all inflamation of the stomach and bowels are exceedingly dangerous if not attended to at once. One bottle of BEGG'S DIARRHŒA BALSAM will do more good in cases of this kind than any other medicine on earth. We guarantee it.

"WHAT is meant by 'free alkali,' Doctor? I see it mentioned in the advertisements of IVORY SOAP."

"'Free Alkali,' Madam, is the alkali which is not combined with the fats or oils of which the soap is made, due to the ignorance or carelessness of the soap maker. Soaps in which 'free alkali' is present are decidedly injurious to both the clothing and the skin when habitually used. I have seen reports of analysis made of the Ivory Soap by men eminent in our profession, and all pronounce it to contain no 'free alkali,' to be made with great care and of materials of the best quality, carefully selected, so I unhesitatingly recommend it for every purpose about the house for which good soap is required."

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

Nature's Wild Rage

Dreadfully Visited Upon Two Families in Chicago.

EIGHT PERSONS SENT TO ETERNITY

And All the Other Members Severely Wounded—An Unfinished Three-Story Brick Falls on a Cottage with Frightful Effect—The Work of Rescue and Names of the Unfortunates—An Unprecedented Fall of Rain—The Windy City Inundated, with Heavy Loss in Property.

CHICAGO, July 29.—The most terrific rainstorm in the history of this city literally flooded everything Saturday evening. Beginning shortly after 6 o'clock, it continued with slight decreases in violence for nearly three hours, and caused a heavy loss in property. But the most serious occurrence during the storm was the wreck of an unfinished brick building at the corner of Twenty-first and Leavitt streets. The building was three stories high. The wind was blowing at the rate of about twenty-four miles an hour during most of the storm, and about 7 o'clock the walls of this building toppled over and fell with a fearful crash upon a cottage by the side of which it was built. Two families occupied the cottage, and one of them was just about sitting down to supper when the disaster occurred. Charles Buck, a laborer, occupied the front rooms of the cottage, and a blacksmith named Cornelius Ferdinanches the rear rooms—in all twelve persons.

The Killed and Wounded.

The following are the killed and wounded: Killed—Mrs. Amelia Buck, 39 years old; Annie Buck, 8 years old; Albert Buck, 6 years old; Cornelius Ferdinanches, 33 years old; Areka Ferdinanches, 31 years old; Cora Ferdinanches, 4 years old; Alida Ferdinanches, 3 years old—alive when taken out, but died shortly afterward; Mea Ferdinanches, 1 year old.

Wounded—Charles Buck, 43 years old, badly cut on the head, back and legs; August Buck, 13 years old, skull fractured, but physicians at the hospital think he may recover; Luda Ferdinanches, 8 years old, injured internally, arm broken, and cut about the head and face—she may recover; Ada Ferdinanches, 7 years old, wounded in the side and severely cut across the top of the head.

Strong Hands to the Rescue.

At the time of the disaster the rain was pouring down in perfect torrents, and the flashes of lightning and peals of thunder were almost incessant. So heavy was the rain that it was some time before the neighbors discovered what had happened. An alarm was turned in to the Hinman street police station, and Lieut. Beck, with nineteen officers, at once went to the scene of the accident, and engine companies Nos. 23, 14, 12 and 36. The cries of the wounded beneath the ruins, mingled with the roaring of the wind and cries of the alarmed women and children in the vicinity, made it an appalling scene. The officers and firemen lost no time, but rushed to the rescue of the suffering victims beneath the debris.

Buck Taken Out Alive.

The first body recovered was that of Albert Buck. It lay in the front part of the house and was badly mangled. When this body was taken out the officers heard the groans of the boy's father, and with redoubled efforts they soon removed the rubbish which held him down and carried him across the street. He soon recovered sufficiently to tell the rescuers how many were in the ruins, and his information was the first intimation they had of the enormity of the disaster.

Poor Little Alida Ferdinanches.

The cries of a child now attracted their attention, but owing to the noise of the wind and thunder it was impossible to locate the exact spot where she lay. And for nearly four long hours Alida Ferdinanches called pitifully for help before they were able to give it. She was among the last taken out. She was horribly cut up. Her face was a mass of cuts and bruises, and her skull was fractured in the forehead. How she managed to call so incessantly for aid when so badly injured was a mystery to all.

Mother and Babe.

The body of Mrs. Ferdinanches was found all doubled up and mangled frightfully. In her arms she carried her 1-year-old baby. Judging from the positions in which they were found she must have been walking across the room with the babe in her arms, and was crushed down without a moment's warning.

In spite of the efforts of the police and firemen it was nearly an hour before any bodies, dead or alive, were recovered. There was full six feet of brick and mortar to be removed before the wrecked cottage was reached, and that any of the occupants escaped is a marvel. Their sufferings during the time they were buried must have been awful.

Cause of the Accident.

When asked if the brick building was faulty in its construction, Lieut. Beck said: "The building inspector was here and said the accident was unavoidable. The building had been well put up, but owing to its unfinished condition it was not strong enough to withstand the wind. The roof had not been put on, and the windows were still out, so the wind got full play. It was in no way due to the construction of the building."

ELSEWHERE IN THE CITY.

A Perfect Deluge Floods Basements and Cellars—In the Parks.

Chicago was a big lake between 7 and 10 o'clock Saturday night. The signal service office reported that 4:12 inches of water fell between the beginning and the end of the storm. The lightning was almost continuous and with the howling of the wind and steady roar of the rain was very trying to nervous people. The parks were all full of people when the storm broke, who had gone there to listen to the regular Saturday afternoon concert, and how they all got home is a mystery. At Lincoln park there was not so much trouble, as it is in a thickly settled part of the city, but at Jackson park thousands crowded the pavilion, among them many women and children. When a lull occurred it was found that the park was a lake and the people had to wade through five or six inches of water to reach the cable car line. All were dressed in holiday attire and the scene was indescribable.

Flooded Premises.

On the north side the damage from flooded basements is estimated at about $100,000, but individual losses are too numerous to note. The sewers were simply unable to carry the water off as fast as it came down, and the result was that it ran over the sidewalks into the basements. The LaSalle street tunnel, through which the north side cable cars run, was five feet deep in water at the lowest level, and passengers had to stand on the seats. Coming to the south side the most notable incidents of the flood were the inundation of the Grand Pacific, Palmer and Leland, in each of which the fires in the boiler rooms were extinguished, stopping the dynamos and forcing the gas to be lighted in the place of electricity.

Same Way with the Theatres.

At the Columbia and McVicker's theatres, The Tribune building, and other places the same thing occurred. The Columbia people lighted the gas, but at McVicker's when the electricity was done there was no gas, and calcium lights was substituted. The water got into the power house of the South Side Cable railway, put out the fires, and forced the company to do its work with horses.

A Yachting Incident.

During the storm E. R. Walsh, living at 276 Michigan avenue, saw what he believed to be a yacht on fire out in the lake. He thought it had been struck by lightning, its sails fired, and that it went down with all on board shortly after. It seems, however, that it was a fisherman's boat. He says he had a large lantern on board, and its light was reflected on the sail, giving it the appearance of being on fire. He arrived in port without damage.

Close Call for Death.

A big tree blew across a Van Buren street car near Sangamon street and nearly demolished it. The car was crowded with passengers, but no one was seriously injured. The wreck was not removed and the track cleared for two hours.

The Storm General.

Reports from Ashland and Prairie du Chien, Wis., Sycamore, Ills., and many other places, state that those places were visited by a severe rainstorm, by which much damage was afflicted upon property and some people hurt.

OHIO PROHIBITIONISTS.

A Synopsis of the Platform Adopted, and the Ticket Nominated.

ZANESVILLE, O., July 25.—The Prohibitionist state convention yesterday made the temporary organization permanent and adopted a platform which begins by acknowledging God as the source of all power and authority in human government; declares in favor of suppressing the liquor traffic, holding that revenue from a traffic criminal in its nature is contrary to the fundamental principles of right; favors woman suffrage; denounces stock and grain gambling; favors arbitration for the settlement of disputes between employers and employes; opposes land monopoly; favors a non-sectional adjustment of the tariff, and declares in favor of the enforcement of Sunday laws.

A resolution was also adopted, not as a part of the platform, declaring that the present riotous attitude of the liquor element in the leading city of the state, under which a murderous assault had already been made upon a member of the Prohibition party, was but another evidence of the terrible results that follow the compromising and profit-sharing policy maintained by the old political parties toward the liquor interest.

The following nominations were made: For governor, J. B. Helwig; for lieutenant governor, L. B. Logan, of Alliance; for supreme judge, Gideon T. Stewart, of Norwalk; for state treasurer, D. M. Trowbridge, of Toledo; for attorney general, E. J. Penney, of Ashtabula. Helwig is from Springfield.

A BIG THIEF ESCAPES.

Bushnell, the Embezzler of $53,000, Gets Away from a Detective.

NEW YORK, July 25.—Police Inspector Byrnes has received a cablegram from Detective Reilley, at Lima, South America, that Bushnell, the New York forger and embezzler, whom Reilley was sent down to arrest, has escaped. Bushnell stole $55,000 from his employers, Butler, Stillman & Hubbard, the well-known lawyers, several years ago. He went to Chili, changed his name to Hanson, became very popular, and in 1885 was made agent at Santiago for the West Coast Telephone company.

A Natural Born Rascal.

About two years later he embezzled $18,000 from the company. His influence and popularity were so great that he could not be brought to punishment. The company, during its efforts to secure his conviction, learned his previous name and history. Detective Reilley was sent from New York to arrest Bushnell for his New York crime.

All the Trouble for Nothing.

He had difficulty in doing so, as there is no extradition treaty with Chili; but that government finally gave Bushnell up. Reilley started home with the prisoner, but at the first stopping place, Iquique, Bushnell managed to escape. Reilly informed Inspector Byrnes that it will be impossible to re-arrest Bushnell unless the United States government instructs its minister to take action in the matter.

Gladstone's Golden Wedding.

LONDON, July 26.—The preparations of the Gladstone Liberal club for the celebration of the ex-premier's golden wedding last evening were on a magnificent scale. For their exercises they built a beautiful terrace overhanging the river front, 160 feet long and twenty-eight feet wide, roofed over with canvass and richly dressed in blue and gold. The pillars and the walls were thickly studded with electric lights and the flowers and plants so profusely scattered about that the whole terrace presented the appearance of a tropical garden. In Hawarden, Gladstone's home, the church bells were kept ringing all day. The ex-premier and his family will go to Hawarden next week, when the festivities here are over, and the celebration will be resumed among his neighbors there.

Billings Eludes the Sheriff.

WAVERLY, Iowa, July 27.—The following telegram was received here Friday afternoon from Gary, D. T., by County Attorney Hazlett:

Billings escaped last night while on trial for perjury. If you hear of him please wire me. FRANK E. MELLARD, Sheriff.

After Billings' release on bail from the Anamosa penitentiary pending a new trial granted him by the supreme court he went to Gary, D. T., where he has since been staying, and it would seem was at his old tricks again. It is understood that his present trouble grew out of an old transaction that he had left unfinished when he returned here from Gary the night before the killing of Kingsley.

Knights of Labor Executive.

CHICAGO, July 25.—The Knights of Labor executive board did not adjourn yesterday, although three of the members—Master Workman Powderly, Secretary-Treasurer Hayes, and John Devlin—have left the city. Mr. Powderly has gone to Columbus, O., and Messrs. Hayes and Devlin are said to have returned home. The further sittings of the board are said to depend upon instructions from Mr. Powderly, whose business in Ohio is not known.

The Boy Confesses His Crime.

MASON CITY, Ia., July 27.—Young Wesley Elkins, 11 years old, has confessed to the murder of his mother and father, who were killed in their beds a short time ago. He says he killed his father with a rifle as he slept and beat his mother to death with a club. There are some who believe he is making the confession to shield some one else.

He Left His Sympathy.

A stranger who was making loud inquiries at the city hall yesterday for the mayor was finally asked by an officer to state his errand.

"I want to make a complaint against the way I was used at the postoffice," he replied.

"But the mayor has nothing to do with the postoffice."

"He hasn't?"

"No, sir. Uncle Sam runs that."

"Well, I've had my satchel stolen, and I want to see him about that."

"It's no use, sir. You should go to the police."

"Hasn't the mayor anything to do with it?"

"Not a thing."

"But they put me off a street car up here I want to see him about that."

"He couldn't help you any."

"Say! You don't mean to tell me that your mayor hasn't got any power, do you?"

"Not in such cases."

"Humph! Just sits right in his office, eh! Just smokes cigars and looks big and bosses the city hall, eh! Say! What's the use? If a feller can't boss the whole roost what's the use of holding office? Say! I'm sorry for him. Give him my love and tell him he has my sympathy."—Detroit Free Press.

A Mean Trick.

Griggs—What is the matter between you and Diggs? I thought you used to be sworn friends.

DEATH OF WILLIAM W. TILTON.

The subject of this obituary tribute was one of the very earliest settlers of Tecumseh. For sixty-four years he has been a resident of Tecumseh or Raisin, and has lived to see all his earlier friends and associates, with one or two exceptions, pass over the river into the Great Beyond. He was born in Jeffrey, Cheshire Co., N. H., July 31st, 1803. His home was with his parents on the farm, until he reached his majority. He then worked a few months on his own account, carefully saving his earnings with which to come to Michigan, and in the spring of 1825 he set out for the new territory. He came via the Erie canal to Buffalo, thence across the lake to Monroe, and the rest of the journey was made on foot. This tramp consumed two entire days and he passed only two or three human habitations on the way. On the 8th of June 1825, he arrived in Tecumseh with all his earthly possessions, which consisted of his wearing apparel and fourteen dollars in money. Prior to coming here he was acquainted with Gen. J. W. Brown, Musgroye Evans and other members of the party of 1824, and it was this fact which influenced him to seek a home among them. He expected to find employment, but the few settlers then here were unable to hire help and pay cash wages. Mr. Tilton soon engaged with Curtis Page, a carpenter, to work for his board. After a few months he received a small stipend in money, which was increased from time to time. He remained with Mr. Page over five years, and by that time he had accumulated sufficient capital to enable him to purchase a farm from the government. His original purchase, which was eighty acres, was made in 1831 and was located on the Adrian road in Raisin, one mile South of the town line. This farm continued in his possession until his death. He bought additional tracts of land afterwards, and for many years he owned 140 acres, among the choicest farming lands of Raisin township. On the 12th of September, 1829, he married Miss Matilda Sisson, daughter of Thomas Sisson of Tecumseh, and upon the purchase of his eighty in 1831, the young couple began the task of building up a home. With all the incidents and struggles peculiar to pioneer life in that early day they were familiar. Mr. Tilton worked a portion of each year at his trade as a carpenter, which materially assisted him in improving his farm. Along in the forties he erected a new dwelling house, which at that time was the finest farm residence in the township, and the "old house on the hillside" still stands as a reminder of those days. His home was a happy one and six children were born to bless it. Two died in infancy. The remaining four—two sons and two daughters—reached man's and woman's estate. The eldest son, Albert, died on the home farm, Jan. 18, 1870, leaving a wife and three children, who now live at Denver, Col. Harriet is the wife of James B. Colvin, one of the most successful farmers of Raisin. Abigail, now Mrs. Alonzo Bean, resides at Jonesville. Geo. W., for many years conducted the old homestead farm. Mr. Tilton's home was sadly broken up by the death of his wife, who died May 27th, 1864, aged fifty-four years. On the 11th of June 1868 he married Mrs. C. M. Bissel of Tecumseh, relict of Theodore Bissel, one of the early settlers. Mrs. Bissel, nee Cynthia Spafford, was a member of the General Brown party. She was the first bride in Lenawee County, having married Mr. Bissel in May 1827. Upon his second marriage Mr. Tilton left the farm and took up his residence in this village where he has ever since resided.

During the past five years his health has been gradually failing and both his mental and physical faculties have been breaking down under the weight of advancing years. He recently made his home with a sister, Adaline Tilton, in this village. A few days before his death, he called to enjoy a chat with Mrs. Tilton at her house, as he has frequently been accustomed to do, and while there had a sinking spell. No apprehensions were felt for him at the time, but he continued to fail, until Thursday last, when at six o'clock in the afternoon, the rugged old frame sank beneath its load, and his soul ascended to God who gave it. He lacked but six days of being eighty-six years old.

The funeral obsequies were observed on Saturday afternoon at three o'clock, Rev. J. M. Getchell officiating, assisted by Rev. W. H. Babbitt. A brief service was given at the house and the procession and attendant friends then proceeded to the Universalist church where the principal services were held. The edifice was filled with a large and sympathetic gathering, comprised of our oldest residents, who had assembled to pay the last tribute of respect to an aged pioneer and honored citizen.

"Uncle William," as he was familiarly known among his acquaintances, was a striking representative of that rugged manhood and sterling character, which have transformed the wilderness of sixty years ago into the garden of Southern Michigan. He was a fond husband, a kind and indulgent father, an honorable and public spirited citizen. He was a well read man upon all subjects, and possessed very decided political and religious views. He was a staunch Republican in politics and an earnest Universalist in his religious belief. When the church was erected in Tecumseh, he was the most liberal contributor to the fund which built it. He became a communicant of the church about twenty years ago, and remained a faithful member until his death. He had lived for many years on borrowed time and finally left us, full of years and honors, as the ripened grain falls beneath the reaper's sickle. He has fought the good fight; he has kept the faith; he has finished his course. With him

"Death is the crown of life."

THE GETTYSBURG PANORAMA.

The first sensation of the visitor to this extraordinary exhibition is one that does not lose any of its freshness upon a subsequent inspection. Although aware, before entering, that he is looking at a building of 134 feet in diameter and 96 feet high, he finds himself, after ascending the little narrow stairs, in an open country stretching many miles in every direction toward the horizon. It is impossible to break the illusion involved in so splendid a triumph of perspective drawing. Then the accuracy of the landscape in every detail is such as to call forth the special plaudits of the Pennsylvanians, one of whom exclaimed the other day, "My God! Look at our Blue mountains." The scenes of valor, of destruction, of carnage and of death upon which the spectator looks down seems never to lose their dreadful interest. The real ground—with a gun here, a broken ammunition wagon there, and a cavalry trumpet in the ditch—the real snake fence is so skillfully continued into the canvas that on slightly lifting his head one can can hear the last agonizing cry of the rebel general Armistead as he falls in the moment of temporary victory. On come the contending hosts, despite the terrific gaps made in them by the enemy's artillery. Riderless steeds, bewildered, fly they know not where; dead and dying strew the field; innumerable instances of individual heroism fill the on-looker with admiration. As a whole and in every detail the work is so unexceptionable that upon retiring from the bloody field old heroes feel that they have "fought their battles o'er again."—Chicago Evening Journal, Aug. 30th.

THE OUTLOOK FOR WHEAT.

Estimating crops before they are harvested is something akin to counting chickens before they are hatched. This is now quite apparent with regard to the wheat crop of the current year. Early estimates by the Agricultural Department at Washington and by commerical agencies placed the crop at something over 500,000,000 bushels, or one of the largest ever grown in the country. Reports from Dakota and other States and Territories of the Northwest now indicate a very short crop in that section, owing to the extreme drough, while in the East the wheat harvest has been seriously damaged by the rainy weather. Between drought in the West and wet weather in the East it is probable that the actual crop will fall many millions short of the earlier estimate.

This rather gloomy outlook has its bright phase, however. The wheat crop in India, Russia and Austro-Hungary is unusually light, so that all the wheat we have in excess of our own needs is certain to be in demand at a fair price. It is not at all improbable, therefore, that the American farmers may realize more money for their wheat than if the crop had turned out to be as great as indicated by the earlier reports.

But while as a whole the wheat farmers of the country may have a profitable year, the 30,000,000 bushels shortage in Dakota will prove little less than an irretrievable disaster to the farmers of that section. Wheat is the Dakota staple and with less than half a crop the farmers of that Territory will have so little to sell that no probable advance in price will begin to make up their losses. Dakota will have little to console itself with this year, except the fact that it will achieve the dignity of Statehood.—Philadelphia Times.

YE OLDEN TIMES.

On reading in the HERALD of June 13th of the Death of Cousin Joseph S. Kies, we were carried back in our minds to our childhood days and the early settlement of Tecumseh and the changes time has brought in that beautiful section of our country, and we are stirred to write some of our recollections of that, our early home. Very many fond recollections of the pleasures and happy days of our early life twine around our hearts, and many forms of sorrow sieze us as we revert back to the loss of dear friends and loved ones. And though far removed from the home of our childhood, our minds often revert back to our life and experiences in old Tecumseh and we think of old friends and acquaintances we once knew these and count up the numbers now living, we sadly realize the changes time has wrought.

In 1829 Uncle Alpheus Kies, the father of Joseph S. George Lazell and our father came from the State of New York and settled with their families in the township of Tecumseh but wheather they all come together we can't say. George Lazell, Uncle Alpheus and father spent all their days where they first settled, but their children have scattered many of them to distant parts of the country, and I would be glad to know or find out if sister Sarah and I are the only surviving ones of the children that were brought to Tecumseh in the year 1829 or previously to that year. Many recollections of our early life are brought vividly to our minds, and there are probably but few living that have any actual knowledge of Tecumseh's earliest days. Fresh in our minds is the recollection of the old log house situated on the old farm of Dr. Patterson now the old resideuce of Uncle Sammy Satterthwaite, where we first lived and the long Indian trail we had to travel to reach father's shop in the village, the frequent visit of the Indians to our house, the gathering of the Indians in the village to receive their pay, when there was more Indians than white people.

We remember the Toledo and Black Hawk wars, when all the able bodied men were called out to fight the Indians, and General Pitman was left in charge of the home guards to protect the women and children, how the people was scared at the creaking of Uncle Moses Smith's new ox cart when they thought that the Indians were coming, the old court house (where we attended school in after years) and the old log jail behind it where Colonel Fletcher was confined for debt, the annual millitary trainings, and hundreds of other incidents of those days are brought to mind. We revert to the old settler's and call them to mind; how many of them are living? Where are they? Gone on before, and soon there will be none remaining to tell the tale of the trials. When we were back in Tecumseh a little over two years ago making our farewell visit to our childhood's home before removing to this far away home we noted the great change. There was but few of the old land marks remaining, and but few old familiar faces to be seen, and those were growing old and wrinkled and their head silvering o'er, and the small boys and girls we once knew, had grown to be stalwart men and women and beyond our recollection, but few were to be seen, most of them had left the home shelter to seek their future in other places.

Then we realized the flight of time, and the changes wrought, and realized that we too are growing old and shall soon be called to pass over into the great unknown, and may we find a rest there that will greatly repay us for all our sorrows, trials and disappointments in this life.

CATARRH.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic researches, however, has proven this to be a fact, and result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to the applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet of this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 west King street, Toronto, Canada. [Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

The State Teachers' Institute for Lenawee County, will be held at Tecumseh, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M., Monday, August 19, and closing at 4 P. M., Friday, August 23.

Supt. E. A. Wilson, Tecumseh, Local Committee.

The value of the instruction received at these Institutes is being very generally recognized by teachers and school officers. As a rule, it has been the experience of County Examiners and other examining officers, that the most successful teachers are those who have availed themselves of the normal instruction offered by these local Institutes.

The daily sessions of the Institutes for this year will, as heretofore, be devoted exclusively to topics of special interest to teachers, presented by persons of extended practical experience as teachers, and who have made a special study of Institute work. The evening lectures will be of a popular character.

The institute law allows teachers, whose schools are in session at the time appointed for the County Institute, held under the direction of the State Superintendent, to close their schools during the continuance of such Institute without forfeiting their wages for as many half days as they are in attendance at the Institute. This provision of law, and the fact that there will be no tuition or enrollment fee exacted, should insure the attendance of every teacher in the county who possesses the true professional spirit.

Full particulars in regard to board, etc., may be obtained upon application to the local committee.

A BEAUTIFUL PAINTING.

The east show window of Strong and McNair's store is adorned with a fine oil painting which has a history. It is about four by five ft. in size and represents that portion of the battle field of Gettysburg which was fought over by the Michigan Cavalry Brigade under the lead of the gallant Custer. In the foreground is a facsimile of the Michigan monument that was erected on the field and which was dedicated on the 12th of June last. As our readers are all aware, Lt. Elliott Gray of Tecumseh belonged to Custer's famous brigade, and he went down to attend the dedication on the 12th of June. While there he boarded in the family of Mr. Zinn, whose daughter, Miss Jessie C Zinn, is a fine landscape painter. She is a native of Gettysburg and was born on the night of July 4th, 1863, the last day of the memorable battle and the night of Gen. Lee's retreat. Before returning home Lieut Gray left an order with Miss Zinn for the painting, and it has just arrived. It has been enclosed in an elegant gilt frame and placed on exhibition for a few days in Strong and McNair's window where everyone can have a free opportunity of examining its beauties. It is probably the finest painting in Tecumseh today and is well worthy a critical examination.

A CURIOSITY.

While cleaning out an old bureau drawer at home the other day a scrap of faded paper was found about the size of a commercial note sheet, which contained this writing.

I think the above acct is reasonable. The treasurer or agent will pay the above when in funds.

THE SIOUX RESERVATION

This body of land, which is about coming into market, is more than five times as large as Oklahoma and is as fine agricultural land as there is on the continent; it is situated in South Dakota, immediately west of the Missouri River, and just north of Nebraska; it comprises over 25 counties or about 10,000,000 acres. For actual settlers this is an opening that will hardly be offered again during the lifetime of this great Republic.

A New Map of the Sioux Reservation with full discription of the same will be found in THE WESTERN WORLD, ILLUSTRATED, for July, a most interesting and valuable Quarterly published at Chicago, Ill, at 25 cents a year, 10 cents per copy.

A narrow escape from drowning occurred on Devils lake, Saturday night. Mr. Charles Guthrie, in charge of a sail boat, and accompanied by Mrs. Thos. Wilkinson and Miss Mamie Judge, started to cross the lake just as the fearful storm came up. They were driven before the wind to a sand bar, where they were obliged to abandon their boat, and make their way ashore on foot, guided by the lightning's fearful glare, where they started in on an hour's job, assorting the shoes and stockings.—Times.

One of the best known and most efficient deputy sheriffs of Lenawee county attended the G.A. R. encampment at Jackson last week. The boys say that his propensity for making arrests never displayed itself more energetically or impartially, but his attempt to run in a bronze dog flashed in the pan. Verily it is a cold day when Henry gets left.

Wide Awake for August is an open air number, full of things to be done out of doors; geology, by Prof. Frederick Starr; boating, by Miss Guiney; and the making of wild flower books, by Miss Harris—it is a pity that the bread-making, which Mrs. White describes as the Boston public school girls do it, could not be carried out of doors also. The number is largely written by travelers and sight-seers. Mrs. General Fremont describes her "Camping near the Giant Trees" in the early California days. Miss Risley Seward, "In the Meadows at Trianon" writes of a somewhat peculiar visit she made to the famous playground of Marie Antoinette and her court, etc.

Hiram Case is a Three Rivers gentleman who celebrated his 92d birthday by cradling, raking and binding and shocking several swaths of wheat. It takes some of the very old boys to set an industrious example to the younger ones.

Oceana county fruitists are rejoicing in the prospect of an excellent fruit crop, peaches, pears, plumes and apples promising an abundant yield. This makes the sixteenth successive crop for the Shelby region, without a failure.

The heated term seems to have set Eaton county folks by the ears, as the July term of their circuit court has more'n 100 cases on its calendar.

Michigan may not be able to boast of her own big babies, but one that's just come across the ocean will locate on her soil and breathe her invigorating air. It weighs sixty pounds and is only a month old, which may be justly considered a fair start in the race of life.

An Ironwood miner in investigating a can of dynamite, carried his experiments to the exploding point, which was alike unfortunate for the experimenter and the explosive stuff. Neither the can nor the fragments of the miner have yet been found.

'Tis commonly supposed that Grand Rapids has some whopping big eaters, but one fellow claims especial distinction as a masticator. He's eleven feet in circumference and can slug more beef, pork, mutton and other victuals than the famous Sullivan.

A lot of musical students have gathered at Three Rivers to receive instructions from a Chicago professor, but many of the local residents made good their escape by taking an early summer vacation.

Notwithstanding that railroad managers stoutly insisted that the 2-cent fare bill would knock their business endwise, the Chicago and West Michigan people have completed the survey of their projected line from Baldwin to Traverse City.

The motive with which things are done often makes quite a difference in the transaction. Thus, when four Flushing sisters were arrested for levying on their neighbors' portable property, and it was found that they were driven to it by pinching poverty, they were released on suspended sentence, and the folks will see that they are better provided for in future.

An Imlay City ruralist accounts for the heavy mosquito crop of this season on the ground of the scarcity of swallows, he claiming that these birds enjoy many a rare feast on the little buzzers. You needn't swallow any more of this hypothesis than seems to fit your own experience.

A Delton youth invested in a box each of tooth powder and corn exterminator of a traveling fakir. He gave the former, as he supposed, to his sweetheart and applied the latter to his corns, but the young man was evidently rattled, for he got the two transposed. The fellow still has his corns, but his dear beloved used the exterminator and lost all her teeth.

Fitzgerald & Bro., of Lincoln, Neb., get the contract of building the Chicago and West Michigan railway extension from Baldwin to Traverse City, they being the lowest of twenty-four bidders. Notwithstanding that it's mid-summer, there are indications abroad that the coming winter will be a shorter. The fact that the Jackson Felt Boot company has had to place contracts in New England to enable it to fill its orders, is a cool July pointer of what January may have in store for us.

One's efforts to assist other people aren't always appreciated, seemingly, and this was evidently the case with the Newaygo parson, who, after preaching a funeral sermon, was compelled to huff it home, a distance of twelve miles through a weltering summer's sun, and that, too, without a mouthful of dinner.

It's not every man who's called upon to serve his country as was Henry Stickney, of Tawas City. The circuit court was short of jurymen on a certain case, and Henry was pressed into the service within an hour after he had reached the age of 21 years.

A York state schoolma'am who's now spending her vacation at Petosky, began her school-room experience more'n half a century ago. She's now old enough to be good—72 years. God bless her—but still wields the birch and ferule with old-time vigor. Long established habit clings with great tenacity.

A Clayton man felt so sure that the divorce mill would grind him out a legal separation that he took time by the forelock and made matrimonial allegiance to partner No. 2. But there's many a slip even in matrimonial matters, and our hero now wishes that he'd been possessed of more patience and discretion, but that may not save him from a job at Jackson.

CHICAGO THE PLACE.

It's the Proper Location for the World's Fair.

SO SAYS THE HON. HARRISON KELLY.

The Fair Will Attract Many Foreigners Who Should Be Given the Opportunity of Seeing the Great Western Country—Senator Hampton and Representative Brower Favor Washington City.

WASHINGTON CITY, July 27.—Harrison Kelly, of Kansas, who succeeded the present minister to Mexico, Judge Ryan, in the house, settled in Kansas forty years ago and comprehends fully the magnitude and possibilities of the great west. He said: "As between New York, Chicago, and Washington as the place for the World's fair I am for Kansas City. But really I can smother my enthusiasm for the metropolis of the southwest sufficiently to vote for Chicago as against the other two named. And the fair ought to be held in Chicago because that is the real center of this great country to-day.

Should See the Wonders of the West.

"The World's fair will attract many foreigners and great throngs of people from the east and south who have no idea now of the vastness and grandeur of our western country. They should be given the opportunity of attending the World's fair in Chicago. If the fair is located in Washington or New York thousands of people will come and go away with but the faintest idea of what our country is. They should see the wonders of our western world. In passing through the east they can view what has been our pride for a century and go on to see our marvels of to-day."

Chicago's Superior Advantages.

Representative Perkins, of Kansas, said: "It seems to me Washington as the capital of the nation is the fitting place for the World's fair to be held. As between Chicago and New York, however, I favor Chicago. Chicago has plenty of room and will put up money to back the enterprise, but New York, judging from past experience, might fail as she has done with several other public undertakings. If Chicago is decided upon we can show the visitors our wonderful progress and will welcome them with true western hospitality."

Hampton Favors Washington City.

Senator Hampton in response to the question as to his choice for the location of the World's fair in 1892 said:

"Washington by all means, because it is the seated of the government and because here are all the public buildings and objects of national interest. I am aware there will be a strong feeling worked up for a more western location for the fair, but it should be held here. Congress, I believe, would encourage it with more liberal appropriations if it were located at the capital. Here is the seat of the government of the great western world. Out in Chicago they really have a new world, but this of the east is the one known to Europeans for 300 years."

Representative Brower's Choice.

Representative Brower, of North Carolina, favors Washington as the site for the World's fair. He said: "Washington is large enough now to accommodate the vast throng of people who will attend the great fair. It is the capital of the nation and the most beautiful city in the United States. I think Washington would be far preferable to either New York or Chicago. There is much here of historical interest. Besides, Washington is central to a large mass of the population in the eastern, southern and middle states. I should be for Washington City."

A Soldiers' Relief Fund.

LANSING, Mich., July 27.—Michigan, through its legislature, has, in addition to providing a home for her disabled veterans, provided for the care of their families outside the home. It authorizes a soldiers' relief commission and a soldiers' relief fund in each county, the members of the commission to be appointed by the judge of probate, to consist of three persons, two at least to be old soldiers, their term of office being three years. A tax not exceeding one-tenth of a mill on all taxable property creates the fund, and the commission, together with a representative from each township, village or city board, meet annually before the 1st of May to determine the amount necessary and the amount to be paid per month to each old soldier or sailor entitled to aid.

Died a Horrible Death.

CARTHAGE, Mo., July 27.—The fatal effect of slumbering hydrophobia was illustrated Friday in the horrible death of Volney Fullerton, a young farmer living near here. A year ago he was bitten by a rabid dog and a mad stone was applied to the wound. Fullerton did not feel an evil effect until last Friday. He was then seized by violent symptoms of hydrophobia and died in horrible convulsions.

Shot by Her Husband.

BALTIMORE, July 27.—William M. Morris, a car-driver, shot his wife Friday night at her mother's home. He probably would have killed her, but her brother, W. J. B. Shanks, took the pistol away from him and shot Morris twice with his own pistol. Morris had been drinking, and his wife was forced to go to her mother's with her three children. Refusing to return caused the shooting.

Relic of the Johnstown Flood.

CLINTON, Ills., July 27.—The Clinton fire department raised some time since a large donation for the Johnstown sufferers. They decided to give it exclusively to the fire companies of that city. Friday the chief of the Clinton department received a large oil-varnished boil from the Johnstown department as a gift and a relic of the flood.

Addicted to Wild West Literature.

ARTHUR, Ills., July 27.—The 7-year-old son of Martin Hill left Friday night and has not been heard of since. It is thought that he went west, as he has been addicted to wild west literature for some time. His father is scouring the country in search of him.

A Hint to the Wise.

Guest—How does it happen, landlord, that your house is full this summer, whereas your rival hasn't hardly a soul?

Woman's Career.

She was a fair girl graduate, enrobed in spotless white,
And on her youthful features shone a look of holy light.
She bent with grace her dainty head to receive the ribbon blue,
Whence hung the silver medal, adjudged to be her due.
I watched her face with rapture as she raised to heaven her eyes,
And moved her lips in prayer as her fingers clasped the prize.
For I knew to education she had pledged her coming days,
To unclasp poor woman's fetters, and free her from man's ways.
Time passed. Our pathways parted, but ever and anon,
My thoughts would stray toward her, and I'd speculate upon
What my graduate was doing, if athwart the scroll of fame,
Among unselfish workers, had been written high her name.
At last I chanced to meet her, but her books were pushed aside,
While around a dainty garment she sewed the lace with pride.
And at her feet her baby, dimpled happy crowing youth,
Upon that silver medal was cutting his first tooth.

It is indeed doing wonders for the afflicted, and no one need to suffer from the terrible drain on the system arising from a disordered state of the kidneys, or from female weakness, that will try this, for it is sure. Hoping you will not consider this letter impertinent, I remain,

SAUL CHOSEN KING.

LESSON V, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 4.

Text of the Lesson, 1 Sam. ix, 15-27—Commit to Memory Verses 15-16—Golden Text, Prov. viii, 15—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of R. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

After the continued and persistent demand of the people for a king, that they might be like other nations, notwithstanding the description of the way their king would treat them, Samuel rehearsed in the ears of the Lord all the words of the people, and the Lord said, "Hearken unto their voice and make them a king" (viii, 21, 22). It would then seem that Samuel, having sent every one to his city, waited upon the Lord to know what next to do and how to find the king.

15. "Now, the Lord had told Samuel in his ear a day before Saul came, saying"— The revised version says, "The Lord had revealed unto Samuel."

16. "To-morrow, about this time, I will send thee a man." Samuel was therefore expecting confidently to meet the man whom God had selected; just where he should meet him and how he would know him he left to God, whom he served, but in confidence made preparation for him. "Thou shalt anoint him to be captain (Prince, R. V.) over my people Israel." See in this verse and the next one the name "my people" repeated four times; think of their treatment of Him and yet hear Him say so tenderly "my people," and speak of hearing their cry and saving them. Years afterwards He says, "How shall I give thee up, Ephraim!" while at the same time He declares that they are bent to backsliding from Him. (Hos. xi, 7, 8.) It is the same Lord who after His resurrection sent a special message of love to Peter, who had denied Him. O, believer, be your God, and draw nearer to Him and behold more faithful.

17. "The Lord said unto him, Behold the man!" How beautiful to see Samuel living so near to God that God can talk so freely to him and make known to him His will so easily; we have the mind of God fully revealed to us in His word and may constantly talk to Him in prayer, and hear Him talk to us in that word if we really desire to. As Samuel looked upon Saul he saw before him a choice and goodly young man, from his shoulders and upward higher than any of the people (v. 2); but remember that was his outward appearance, the state of his heart before God was of more importance. All prophets, priests and kings in Israel were as to their office (not their character) types of the greatest prophet and true Priest-King, Jesus of Nazareth; and as we read of this first king chosen to reign over Israel and hear the words "Behold the man," we are at once carried forward to a day when the God of Samuel and of Israel stood in human form before the people for their acceptance or rejection, and the Roman governor said, "Behe man! Behold your King!" (John xix, 5, 14) and although then and still rejected He shall yet sit on the throne of David and reign over the house of Jacob forever and the people shall be all righteous. (Luke i, 32, 33; Isa. lx, 21.)

18. "Tell me I pray thee where the seer's house is." A prophet was before time called a seer (v. 9); that is, one who sees what natural eyes cannot see. Saul and his servant had given up seeking the asses and were now seeking the man of God if perchance he might tell them of the lost animals.

19. "I am the seer." How like this is to the reply of Jesus to the woman at the well, and to the blind man, "I that speak unto thee am He," "It is He that talketh with thee." (John iv, 26; ix, 37.) "Ye shall eat with me today." How surprised he must have been; as much so, perhaps, as Zaccheus, who only wanted to see Jesus, but was called down from the tree to receive Him into his house.

20. "Set not thy mind on them; for they are found." If we would consult Him who is perfect in knowledge and is always with us (Job. xxxvi, 4) we would more readily find our lost things. There is nothing too small or trifling to tell Him about, for He is interested in all that concerns us, and we are commanded to be careful or anxious about nothing, but in everything to make our requests known to God with thanksgiving that thus we may enjoy the peace of God (Phil. iv, 6, 7). "On whom is all the desire of Israel?" In saying that the desire of all Israel was to Him and His Father's house, He said what was true as God saw it, for Israel as yet knew not who would be king.

21. "A Benjamite, * * * smallest of the tribes, * * * my family the least of all the families." Benjamin, since the slaughter of Judg. xx, 46-48, was literally the smallest of the tribes in point of numbers, and it may have been in the same respect that Saul's family was also the least, for his father is said in verse 1 to have been a mighty man of power or substance.

22-24. "So Saul did not eat with Samuel that day." What a day of surprises for Saul! Samuel expects him, speaks to him of a high place in Israel, invites him to a feast, gives him the chief place at the feast, and the chief portion of the feast, a portion specially reserved for him, while all that Saul had in view when he came to Samuel was that he might recover the lost asses of his father. How many people are today intent upon earthly things, thinking of nothing higher, while there is a feast and a kingdom and great honor awaiting them, of which they are utterly ignorant. The difference is that their enjoyment of this feast and honor depends upon their being invited and accepting the invitation.

25. "Samuel communed with Saul upon the top of the house." This was after the feast when they were come down from the high place into the city, and Saul and Samuel were alone. We are not left in ignorance as to the subject of their conversation, for chapter x, 16, implies that the communion was concerning the Kingdom. When the real King came, of whom all good kings were as to their office, a type, He was always speaking of the Kingdom, and during the forty days after His resurrection, when He appeared many times to his disciples, He was speaking of the things pertaining to the Kingdom of God. (Acts i, 3). When that Kingdom comes, Israel shall be the center, Jerusalem the throne of Jehovah, and all nations of the earth shall go up from year to year to worship the King, the Lord of Hosts at Jerusalem.

26. "Up, that I may send thee away." So spake Samuel to Saul, very early next morning. Just as the three apostles had soon to come down from the Mount of Transfiguration where they would fain have remained, so Saul must go forth from this holy place and return to take up for a little season the ordinary affairs of life. Though by faith in Christ Jesus we are now children of God and joint heirs with Christ, seated with Christ in the heavenlies (Rom. viii, 17; Eph. ii, 6), yet we must go forth day by day into the ordinary affairs of life, there to glorify God while we wait for the kingdom. If we sincerely desire above all things the glory of God, there is one sentence in the words of Samuel to Saul which ought to be a great comfort and rest to us, and I can truly say it has been to me; it is, "Do as occasion serve thee, for God is with thee." (Chap. x, 7.)

Those English Capitalists.

COLUMBUS, Ga., July 27.—English and eastern capitalists have made propositions for the purchase of many southern cotton plants with a view of combining interests in one central trust company, in the same manner that cotton-seed oil mills have been combined. There is no knowing the final result.

NEW YORK, July 27.—English capitalists are trying to secure the control of the leather manufactories of Newark, N. J. Eighty per cent. of the patent leather manufactured in this country is made in Newark.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 29.—The negotiations of the English syndicate for the Indianapolis breweries have terminated in a failure to agree on terms.

Heavy Floods in Kansas.

FREDONIA, Kan., July 26.—Fall river is rising two inches an hour, and in some places is seven miles wide and twenty feet deep. One iron bridge has already gone and the others are dangerous. The water is now a quarter of a mile from the city and many people are moving from their houses. Some houses are already flooded and the people are being taken out in boats. Railroad travel is stopped. The only way out of the city now open is by the north across the Verdemris river, and that river is rising three inches an hour. There has been no mail for two days.

NEW YORK, July 27.—The body of an unknown man has been washed ashore near Babylon, L. I. It is thought possible that it is that of Hogan, the missing aeronaut.

We notice a new departure in the treatment of disease that promises to revolutionize the medicine business. It consists in the collection of the species used by noted specialists of Europe and America, and bringing them within the reach of all. For instance, the treatment pursued by special physicians who treat indigestion, stomach and liver troubles only, was obtained and prepared. The treatments of other physicians, celebrated for curing catarrh, were procured, and so on till these incomparable cures now include diseases of the lungs, kidneys, female weakness, rheumatism, nervous debility, and piles. Originated and used by specialists, being a positive cure for each disease, these preparations are the best remedies procurable. We advise all to send three two cent stamps to the Chase Medical Specialty Co., 179 West Adams St., Chicago, Ill., and receive by return mail their interesting hand book.

HOW CAN PARENTS

allow their children to cough and strain and cough and calmly say: "Oh! it is only a little cold," and keep giving them cheap and dangerous medicines, until they are down with lung fever or consumption, when they can be so easily relieved by BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP? It has no superior, and few equals. J. J. ORR, Druggist.

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No! medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

J. J. ORR Druggist.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a pace we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought untill we recive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

WRITING MACHINE CABINET and OFFICE DESK

For Remington, Hammond, and Crandall Type Writer.

The advantages of this Type-writer and Office Desk over all other so-called Combination Cabinets, are:

First.—The ease and simplicity with which the desk is changed from a Library or Office Desk to a Type-writer Table. This change is effected by pushing the lid covering the machine back in the rear of cabinet—it being a roller top—removing it entirely from sight, thus overcoming the objectionable board and sounder in front of the operator. The movable top is perfectly flat, is bevel edge covered, and forms a complete writing desk when the machine is not in use. The table on which the machine rests is so evenly balanced by our patent adjustments that it needs but a slight touch to bring the machine in position.

Second.—The advantages of the swinging table are: The table is so balanced near its center on patent malleable iron arms, that when the machine brought in place for use, it does not depend on ropes or hangers at rear of platform for support, but is held rigidly in place by its own weight, making it impossible for the machine to be tumbled down an incline in back of desk by the breaking of a rear support. The machine rests on patent slides which keeps the machine in place, and can be drawn out beyond the desk, well under the operator's hand.

Third.—The construction of the lid closing machine space makes it air tight, and the table having felt around its boarders thoroughly protects the machine from dust.

Fourth.—The foot rest and the construction of the table adjustments makes the desk as ridged as though the top was one solid board, which is a matter of great importance where a solid type-writing table is required. No operator can do good work on a shaky table.

Lastly.—The cabinet is a splendid piece of cabinet work. We manufacture them in Walnut, Antique Oak, Natural Oak, Natural Cherry, Cherry imitation, Mahogany and Ash.

Agents wanted to sell these cabinets, and where we have no agencies established we will sell direct from our works at wholesale prices.

NICHOLS & SHEPARD
BATTLE CREEK, MICHIGAN.

Why Should I Go to Montana?

Great Reservation. Because 18,000,000 acres of free government land, with a delightful climate and equally suited for general farming and stock raising, have just been opened to the homeseeker, in the Milk River valley and near Benton and Great Falls.

Stock Raising. Because the favorable climate and superior grasses of Montana make it the natural home of horses, cattle, sheep and other domestic animals; and because winter feeding is not required, as stock grazes at large the year around.

General Farming. Because a rich soil and abundant summer rains produce wheat, oats, rye, barley, and the grasses and vegetables of a quality, size and yield unsurpassed.

Mining. Because Montana produces more of the precious metals than any other state or territory, and abundant opportunities remain to secure valuable properties at nominal cost.

Immigration. Because the Great Reservation is the meeting point of settlers from the Pacific Coast and from the Eastern States and is the only extensive tract of good land left, suitable for settlement.

Business. Because the rapidly growing towns along the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. offer splendid opportunities to engage in business.

Manufacture. Because the 1,000,000 horse-power water power at Great Falls, the extensive coal veins, the wool, mineral and grain raising resources of Montana offer exceptional opportunities to the manufacturer.

Tourist. Because the canon of the Gates of the Mountains, the Great Falls of the Missouri, the Giant Fountain and Continental Divide offer the most sublime and diversified scenery to be found on the Continent. Take a summer tour.

Why Travel by the St. P., M. & M.? Because only by it can you travel through the largest body of free land left for settlement. Because it reaches the Great Falls, with the largest water power on the continent. Because it reaches Helena, the richest city of its size in the world, and because it is the shortest and best route to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth. Special tourists' and landseekers' rates. Daily trains through solid to Montana. Choice of three routes to the Pacific coast. THE COWBOY IN THE EAST.

The Indians he slashed and gashed and slapped and slew and slaughtered;
He'd boot and shoot the howling Ute, who squealed and reeled and tottered;
He'd bang and whang at every gang of robber and marauder,
The horse thief strung on the limb he hung, and thus kept law and order.

In every fight big luck he struck, and never met disaster;
In glen and den, 'mid brutes and men, he never found a master;
No gash or slash could ever dash against his front terrific,
No foe could stand his red right hand that slugged
so scientific.

The rattlesnake he punched and crunched; he overthrew the bison;
He sought and fought an awful lot each beast
'neath the horizon.
No scar or jar could ever mar, no harm could ever get him,
But want of breath and speedy death o'ertook all things that met him!

But to the town he came for fame, he moved into the city;
He fell, ah well! I grieve to tell—the pity!—oh, the pity!
He'd hit and split his head, and get a bruise at every crossing,
And the hardic man and the moving van his mangled form was tossing.

Whene'er he crossed the street his feet with wheels and things were tangled;
And his frame became a bloody shame, all maimed and mussed and mangled;
He'd fall and sprawl right thro' it all, his bones
all dislocated,
With most of his face stuck on the wrong place, and both of his feet mismated.

And soon it came to pass the gas the big gas house exploded—
And he—ah me!—was hit, you see, he didn't know it was loaded.
Oh, my! in the sky he shot as high as war contractor's bounties,
And his scattered frame was found, they claim, in nineteen different counties!

—S. W. Foss in Yankee Blade.

He Knew.

A teacher was telling her little boys about temptation, and showing how it sometimes came in the most attractive attire. She used as an illustration the paw of a cat.

"Now," said she, "you have all seen the paw of a cat. It is as soft as velvet, isn't it?"

"Yesem," from the class.

"And you have seen the paw of a dog?"

"Yesem."

"Well, although the cat's paw seems like velvet, there is, nevertheless, concealed in it something that hurts. What is it?"

No answer.

"The dog bites," said the teacher, "when he is in anger; but what does the cat do?"

"Scratches," replied the boy.

"Correct," said the teacher, nodding her head approvingly. "Now, what has the cat got that the dog hasn't."

"Whiskers," said a boy on the back seat; and the titter that ran around the class brought the lesson to an end.—Young Catholic.

A Cautious Man.

A man who had been hurt by a fall out Fort street, the other day, had an ambulance summoned, but by the time it arrived he had regained much of his nerve, and before he would permit them to lift him in, he inquired:

"What will the charge be?"

"Nothing," he was assured.

"What! Is it free?"

"It is."

"Well, that's fair enough, but look here, don't fool with me! If you expect to make me buy a dollar's worth of church fair tickets at the other end of the route you'll get badly left!"—Detroit Free Press.

A Bad Drawing.

—Life.

A Sudden Rise.

"How much is cannel coal, Mr. Littleton?"

"I think it's eighteen dollars. Just wait a minute."

He goes over to the bookkeeper.

"Has Elkins paid his bill yet?"

"No, sir."

"Ah, Mr. Elkins, I find cannel coal has gone up to twenty-four dollars."—Harper's Bazar.

No Effect on the Family.

Poseyboy—Not much. His father was in soap, you know.

Took Her by Surprise.

"I have sometimes thought"— began Mr. Porridge, whereat Miss Rasbly gave an exclamation of amazement, and then remarked apologetically: "It may be. Of course I have no knowledge of what you may have done before I became acquainted with you."—Richmond Dispatch.

Lady—Little boy, isn't that your mother calling you?

Little Boy—Yes'm.

A Dark Night.

You kin harp about yer moonlight
As much as ev'r ye please,
'Bout it's shimmer an' its shadders
A-playin' 'mongst the trees.

But jes' give me a pitch dark night,
With black clouds in the sky
What' ye want to know my reason?
Well—I kin give the why.

It was jes' on such an evenin'
I member well the weather,
We's comin' home from singin' school—
A lot of us together

An' somebody was next to me,
But you needn't ask me who,
And in the dark—he held my hand,
An' kept on holdin' too

Somethin' 'at made me so happy
I can't forget the night,
An' I know he wouldn't hev said it
Ef the moon 'd ben shinin' bright.

So jes' harp about yer moonlight
As much as ev'r ye please,
'Bout its shimmer an' its shadders
A-playin' mongst the trees:

But jes' give me a pitch dark night,
With clouds a-rollin' grand,
An' my sweetheart walkin' by my side,
A-holdin' of my hand.

THE FAMOUS FAIRS

AND EXHIBITIONS OF THE ANCIENT AND MODERN WORLD.

An Interesting and Instructive Chapter of History—The Great Fairs of All Nations and All Times—How They Have Led Up to the Immense Modern Exposition—The Part They Have Played in Civilizing the World.

Fairs are very old in history. Far back in the ages fairs were held in Asia. The first fairs, and the fairs held for centuries, were religious or semi-religious. They drew pilgrims together in vast crowds to some holy city or shrine, primarily to worship. The ancient Jews thus assembled annually at Jerusalem to celebrate the Feast of the Passover. The great Mohammedan fairs at Mecca, the Russian fair at Nizhoni-Novgorod, and the still more venerable fair of India, at Hurdwar, on the Upper Ganges, were of a religious order. Of course the pilgrims had to be fed and cared for, and merchants soon perceived that these vast concourses furnished them with exceptionably great markets. Therefore the early historic fairs gradually changed from religious festivals solely to at which the dealers in all sorts of merchandise assembled to sell their wares. Here goods of all sorts and from all regions came together and were compared, and competition fixed prices. The artisans also gathered and compared and sold their wares, and showed their newest inventions. Animals were gathered and sold, and the fairs tended to improve breeds and breeding. The governments that protected the pilgrims also protected the traders, and made the fairs, in those ages of violence, the safest markets in the world. Over 1,000 years ago, Alfred the Wise established the fair in England. In 960 they were established in Flanders. France still holds her ancient fairs at Beaucaire. Spain has her fairs at Isidro del Campa, with the grand religious pilgrimage and festival of San Isidro. Hungary holds hers at Pesth. German fairs date from the 12th century. The principal ones are held at Leipsic, Frankfort-on-the-Main, Frankfort-on-the-Oder, and Brunswick. The great fair of Italy is that of St. Mary Magdalen, in Sinigalia. Gradually all these fairs have changed from being first religious, then market fairs, to the modern agricultural fair, cattle fair, or horse and sheep fair, or machinery fair, and finally to the most modern fair of all,

THE GREAT EXPOSITION FAIR, which combines all the rest, and constitutes a new world, at which everything that exhibits the progress of modern life is shown, and where states and nations compete with each other in invention, in their grandest and most beautiful works of art, in manufactures, in improved animals, in agriculture, horticulture, floriculture, in short in all that makes and elevates modern civilization above the dark ages of the past. This great modern fair requires an immense outlay of money. It must have large and attractive grounds, vast and costly buildings, a purse from which, as in the case of the approaching great Detroit Exposition, $100,000 can be offered in prizes. It must have such a success assured in advance that railroad and steamer companies will be eager to offer low rates for both goods and passengers, and to organize large excursions to attend it from many states. It must attract attention and large public interest all over the continent. States, territories, provinces, and transcontinental lines of railroad, must collect for it special exhibits over vast areas of country. It must attract people by rare, costly and large art galleries, and great musical concerts, shows, sports and spectacles. Its expenditures must be enormous. In short it must be

GIGANTIC ALL OVER.

World's fairs, for the competition of nations, are a modern outgrowth. The first was held in London, followed, in a few years, by the second, in New York, in 1852. The New York World's fair was formally opened by President Pierce and his cabinet. President Pierce was, at that time, a florid looking man. His address was brief; his manner turgid. Immediately after the ceremony he visited an immense saloon across the way, where he and other dignitaries drank brandy and water together. This shows how customs have changed since that day. The tall, martial figure of General Scott, in his shirt sleeves, with one of his arms in a sling, owing to a recent fall from his carriage, attracted the greatest attention and enthusiasm, as he appeared upon the stage.

THE CENTENNIAL OF 1876,

opened by President Hayes and cabinet, in Philadelphia, was the next American World's fair. England, France and Austria had held world's fairs previously. That of France, under Napoleon III, was the most brilliantly successful. The American centennial was of prodigious benefit to the arts and manufactures of the United States. It revolutionized—it may fairly be said to have created—our present artistic manufactures of furniture, wall paper, silver ware, diamod and gem cutting, cloth making especially in wool, and ceramics; and, strange to say, it for the first time taught the American people how to manufacture good flour and the American people how to make first class bread and coffee. Our roller process-flour, Vienna yeast and Vienna bread, and Vienna coffee came to us from Austria. American architects learned something, even from semi-barbarous Japan, and much more from Europe. Until then we were an ill-dressed people. The English and French textile fabrics gave to us as a people, and to our manufacturers, new ideas. The exhibition was a vast school in elegant taste; a vaster school in the beauty and value of high art. It has been worth hundreds of millions upon hundreds of millions of dollars to this country.

THE LATEST DEVELOPMENT of American fairs is the big exposition. Among the most famous of the past few years have been the great Cincinnati exposition, the Chicago, St. Louis, St. Paul, Atlanta, Louisville and Buffalo expositions, with large and costly buildings and extraordinary attractions. The Detroit International Exposition, of the United States and Canada, this year, September 17th-27th, will excel all these in the immensity and elegance of its buildings, the beauty of its location and grounds, its $100,000 premiums, and its varied and costly special attractions. Its magnificent art gallery, its wonderful display of machinery and inventions; its vast show of cattle and horses, sheep and swine; its big dog, cat, poultry, bird, and pet animals show, its series of grand concerts and international band tournament; its continual series of races, games, processions, displays, and other extraordinary attractions will be upon a scale unequalled in the history of great expositions. It is from such expositions as this that farmers, manufacturers, merchants, artists, inventors, and all the industries of the country gain fresh impulses and larger knowledge to achieve future triumphs, and advance the nation in the paths of improvement and prosperity.

News from School.

The young aunty was in the country; the kid was at school in town. "Dear Helene," wrote the kid, "Carl cort six mice in one night. How is mama's arm? Tell rose that I chained seet and got put up. I am righting letters all a time. No botty haiped me and I think it is good. And if some are rong you had some rong to, and if you don't want to bellefe it then ast miama. Your loving boy, Walter."—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Long and the Short of It.

"Jimmy, d' yez think th' bye 'll iver be as tall as yersilf?"

"Sure of'm thinkin' ay he kapes on he'll be as shorrt some day."—Harper's Bazar.

The Man Who Lost the Race.

I was hoofing it along a highway in Arkansas, my horse having gone dead lame and being left with a farmer, when a man driving a horse and buggy overtook me and invited me to ride. I was only too thankful for the offer, and when I got in beside him I liked his looks. He offered me a cigar. We exchanged names. He was informed on politics and current events. It was a spanking horse he had, and he kept a steady gait for mile after mile. The only thing about the man that puzzled me was the way he had of looking behind every few minutes, and I finally inquired:

"Are you expecting some friend to overtake you?"

"Well, no—not a friend," he replied.

"Enemies?"

"It may be that the sheriff and his posse will be fools enough to try and overtake me."

"My friend," I said, after swallowing the lump which suddenly gathered in my throat, "is there any good reason why the sheriff should want to overtake you? This is rather blunt, I'll admit, but if I hurt your feelings I am ready to beg pardon."

"Oh, no harm done," he laughed. "I borrowed this horse and rig about two hours ago without the formality of asking, and the owner may hope to recover it. Don't give yourself any uneasiness, however. I run to horses and not to highway robbery."

Three miles further on, as we rose a hill, he looked back and then pulled up and said:

"We must part here. The sheriff and half a dozen others are in pursuit and every pound of weight will now tell."

"I am very much obliged for your kindness."

"Oh, not at all. Your society has been reward enough. I would suggest that you enter that thicket and lie close until the party gets by. When an Arkansas sheriff gets after a stolen horse he means to hurt somebody and his crowd isn't particular who it shoots at. And say, you needn't make any special effort to report that you have seen me. Savey?"

"I won't."

"Then good-by."

He put the horse on a dead run, and was out of sight in two minutes. I secreted myself as directed, and in a few minutes the posse thundered by in a cloud of dust. I followed at a leisurely gait, and at the end of two hours came upon them, grouped around a tree. Hanging from a limb was the lifeless body of my friend of the road, and they were now waiting for the blown and exhausted horses to recuperate.—New York Sun.

Getting Acquainted.

It is a very simple process for children to become acquainted with each other if they are left to their own devices. This is the way it comes to pass:

"Why, I did not know that you and that little girl had got acquainted yet," said a Roxbury father to his 6-year-old son, who came in from a walk on the adjoining lawn with the tiny daughter of the new next door neighbor.

"Yes, Clara and I have been 'quainted lots of days," said the very small boy.

"What did you say to her first?" asked the father.

"Oh, Clara spoke to me first. She came down by the chicken house and asked me how many prayers I say nights, and I told her, and then I asked her how many prayers she says and she told me, and then we were 'quainted."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Possibly.

Friend—Are you going to take a vacation this summer, Hardware?

He Could Stand It.

THE DARKY DUCKED IN TIME.

It Was a Trick He Learned During the War, and It Served Him Well.

From where we sat on the tavern veranda we could look right across the Mississippi river, although at the edge of the river on our side there was a bluff 40 feet high, with a strong current below. All along this bluff were commons, and we had an unobstructed view. We were talking and smoking when a goat came around the corner of an old abandoned warehouse and began to feed toward us. Five minutes later an old white headed darky, using a cane to help him along, came out from behind the same warehouse and stood almost on the edge of the bluff, and appeared to gaze across the river.

"What a fat take that goat has got, if he only knew it!" whispered one of the party.

"What a fool of a nigger to take such a risk!" growled a second.

We ought to have warned the old man, who seemed totally unsuspicious of danger, but we didn't. Human nature is just that way. He had been there two or three minutes when the goat observed him and began to twitch his tail. It was none of his business that the man was there, and no law compelled him to kick up a fuss, but we all saw that he meant to do it. As he gathered for a run every man rose up to warn the victim, but no warning was uttered. It was human nature to want to see the fun. The goat shot away like a flash, and as he drew near he made a long jump to give full force to the intended blow. Next instant both had disappeared, and we ran down expecting to see them struggling in the muddy waters. As we reached the bluffs the old man rose up from a pit dug within two feet of the edge, and grinned and lifted his hat and said:

"Mawnin', gem'len. 'Spected to find me down dar', I reckon."

He pointed to the goat, which was swimmind wildly about as the current carried it down, and one of the party replied:

"Yes, we certainly thought you were a goner. You dropped in there, eh? You must have been pretty quick about it."

"Wall, sorter, but dat was no trick at all. Doorin' de wah, when de Yankee gunboats lay ober dar' an' frowed shot at de guns up heah, I war one of de cull'd gem'len who handled de shovel an' de sand bags. Dat's whar I l'arned to duck. Dem Yankees didn't know me, an' dey kept tryin' to kill me, an' I had to duck an' dodge so often dat arter de wah closed I nebber got straightened up agin. Ize bin layin' fur dat goat more'n two weeks, an' now he's dun gone an' won't bodder nobody no mo'. I used to cuss dat wah when it was goin', but now I see what a blessin' it was. Whar' would de ole man be now if de Yankees had not frowed ten tons of cannon balls at him an' l'arned him to duck?"—New York Sun.

The Bad Boston Uncle.

Among the children of a certain Sunday school is a bright little boy of four years. He has an uncle who takes great pleasure in teaching him nonsensical verses. A few Sundays since his teacher was telling the class about the busy bees, and asked if any of the children could tell her anything about them.

"Waldo can," spoke up the little fellow.

"Well, Waldo, you may stand in front and tell us what you know."

And Waldo, rising proudly, steamed away with these lines:

"How doth the little busy bee
Delight to bark and bite,
To gather honey all the day
And eat it up at night!"

Trying to suppress a smile the teacher asked:

"Did your mother teach you that?"

"No, my Uncle Arthur did!"—Boston Transcript.

BELFORD'S MAGAZINE.

A Magazine Which Has Come to Stay: The Strongest, Cheapest and Best Published in America.

A complete full-sized novel by the best and most popular authors in every issue. 12 unabridged standard works of fiction in a year. A complete library of fiction and storehouse of original literature, besides over 1800 pages of short stories, sketches, essays, reviews, poems and passing events.

Belford's Magazine is not an experiment. Seizing a vacant place in American literature, it has arisen at once to the highest position, and now stands the rival of the most popular, best edited, and most costly magazines published in this country. Without prejudices, but with strong principles, liberal in its views, uncompromising in opposition to fraud and injustice, it aims to teach the soundest elements of good government; to point out errors and correct wrongs; to applaud the good and stamp out the evil; to do its whole duty by the people. With all this it gives a complete original novel by a great author in each issue, the strongest short stories and the most timely essays and articles, information upon all subjects, sincere exposition of political questions, current dramatic events, reviews, poems, etc.

It is a magazine for democrats, because it believes that honest democratic principles, honestly applied, will best serve the needs of the people. It is a magazine for republicans, because it upholds good government, clean records and honest administration, aside from party prejudices, and because every truth-seeking republican should study the aims, tenets and acts of the opposite party as exhibited in a journal known to the above political falsehood or evasion. It is a magazine for the library of the man of leisure, the table of the planter, the fireside of the farmer. It is a magazine for every intelligent reader who takes an interest in good literature, strong fiction and clever essays. Send six cents for sample copy of $2.50 per year—25 cents a number.

THOUSANDS OF TESTIMONIALS FROM HAPPY HEARTS

He Was Getting It.

At one of the towns below Rochester a woman and her nurse and child got aboard, and it wasn't long before the child, who was a boy of 3, began to act up. The mother paid no attention to him whatever, not even when he began to kick and bite, strike and squall. All the passengers soon agreed that the young autocrat was in sore need of a spanking, but the mother had her nose in a novel and the nurse didn't want to take the responsibility. By and by an old man, who had been suffering with headache, could stand it no longer, and he leaned up and whispered to the nurse:

"Why don't you give that young'un a good pounding?"

"Kape shtill, yer honor," she replied with a wink. "I've got four pins sticking into his body already, and in a minute or two I'll have thray or four more."—Detroit Free Press.

DROWNING AT DEVILS LAKE.

The multifarious attractions at Devils lake have succeeded in luring to its shores a mass of humanity, on a Sunday, that is swelling to enormous proportions. Excursions from all sections of the country are railroaded there from north, south, east and west.

On these excursions come the good, bad and indifferant—those who come to worship at the shrine erected by Evangelist Weber, and those on pleasure bent.

Among the former was Mr. State Hines and Mr. M. P. Treat, of Alvordton, Ohio. They were taking a ride in a clinker rowboat. After they had reached the vicinity of the sand bar, Mr. Hines, who was an amateur oarsman, while attempting to turn the boat around, succeeded in capsizing it.

Mr. Treat seized the boat, and hung on long enough to save his life, as a number of craft had put off from shore to the rescue.

The boat drifted some seven or eight feet away from Mr. Hines, who, being unable to swim, went down in about ten feet of water, and was never seen again alive.

Under Sheriff McDowell was on the ground, and with the assistance of Mr. Aldrich, Mr. Beardsell, and the steamer Flora, the body was recovered by Mr. W. J. Hall, after being in the water three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. Hines was a very temperate man, 31 years old, and was a traveling salesman for the Albion Manufacturing company. He had a young wife with him, who took possession of the body, and started home with it on the excursion train.

Mr. Treat, the gentleman who was with him, is a son of Deacon Treat, who lived south of Adrian so many years, and for whom the Treat road is named. He is a merchant at Alvordton, and had accompanied the party on this excursion.—Adrian Times of Monday.

Catarrhal Deafness, Hay Fever—A New Home Treatment.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membranes of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic researches, however, has proven this to be a fact, and result is that a simple remedy has been formulated, whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to the applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N. B.—For catarrhal discharges peculiar to females (whites) this remedy is a specific. A pamphlet of this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 west King street, Toronto, Canada. [Scientific American.

Sufferers from catarrhal troubles should read the above carefully.

Talk about business! Our Woolen Mills have orders for one style of goods that will consume sixty thousand pounds of wool. If it takes twelve thousand sheep one year to grow the above amount of wool, how many sheep less would have been required if they had been left in a state of nature, tails dangling?

A new dynamo of greater power is being put in the woolen mills to enable the operatives to work nights. The goods of the company are becoming so popular that night work has become a necessity, and as soon as arrangements can be made the work will go on until 9 o'clock at night.

Everybody that has money or credit is putting in their winter supply of coal. No doubt the price is as low now as we can expect, $5.75 per ton, delivered.

Mrs. Larzelere has been for many years a member of the M. E. church, and the beautiful life she has lived has testified plainer than words could do, as to her belief in and reliance on the religion she professed. Patient and uncomplaining through all the long months of suffering, she was glad to lay down life's many burdens and rest in the Master's arms. Among those who were at the funeral from abroad were Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Cairns, Mr. and Mrs. Noah Burroughs, Mrs Packard, Mr. Mather, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Blood of Tecumseh, and Mr. and Mrs. William Larzelere from Saline.

What a Physician Says.

J. M. Loose Red Clover Co., Detroit:

I cheerfully furnish the following for publication.

Mrs. S., age 36, cancerous face (cell cancer), had tried many physicians, and on presentation to me was a horrible sight to look upon. Nose partly eaten away, deep pits in cheeks, forehead and chin. As a last hope I put her on Loose's Extract Red Clover—large doses internally, and as a local application, I used the Solid Extract in plaster form. She improved rapidly from the first week, and in four mo. was entirely well. Now eighteen mo. since treatment, and no signs of return.

JOHN J. WEAVER.

Ulceration of the leg (Indolent Ulcer). Recovered entirely after three months' treatment with Red Clover Extract and Solid Extract Dressing. Now one year since treatment, and no sign of return.

WALTER W. HUME.

Cancer of Lip and Skin Disease. Entirely cured with three months' treatment with Red Clover Tonic and Solid Extract Dressing. Now over year and no sign of return.

H—— B——

Secondary Syphilis was entirely cured by Red Clover Extract in three months, with none of the results such as are left by mercury in such cases.

If you have any doubting physicians, they can write to me and I will give them a full history of each case.

WENT IN FOR VICTORY OR DEATH.

The Arab Forces and Their Leader Insist on a Terrible Slaughter.

LONDON, Aug. 5.—England is drawing a long breath of relief after the news of the complete rout of her enemies in Egypt on the banks of the Nile early Saturday morning. Further details of the battle received here describe it as a scene of revolting slaughter, such as could scarcely occur where both combatants are civilized soldiers. Nor does the responsibility for the butchery rest upon the English troops and their Egyptian allies.

Victory or Death with Them.

Long after the fate of the day had been decided, after all hope of recovering their lost ground must have been abandoned by the fanatical dervishes, they continued to hurl themselves upon their foes only to be mercilessly mowed down as ripe grain before the reaper. They refused all quarter and gave none, but with a grim determination that knew but two issues to a fight—victory or death—they fought as bravely and as stubbornly when the deadly fire of their enemies had cut great swathes in their ranks, and when every movement was hampered by the piled up bodies of their own dead, as when first with unbroken front and confident of victory, they faced their foes.

The Dervish Leader Killed.

It was while leading the scattered remnants of his brave warriors in this forlorn hope that the Dervish leader, Wad-el N'jumi, fell, pierced by a bullet in his brain. His followers, nothing daunted by his fate, dashed themselves over and over again upon the pitiless and unbroken line of rifle barrels in front of them, and kept up the fight long after every vestige of organization among them had been destroyed, and when nothing was left for the scattered fanatics but to sell their lives as dearly as possible. So it came that fully one-half of the invader's force was left dead upon the field.

The Arab Force Wiped Out.

The small number of fighting men which Wad-el-N'jumi brought into the engagement is a complete surprise. All estimates heretofore credited him with an available force of no less than 6,000 men, while it turns out that he could not at any time have had more than half that number. The whole Dervish force is now completely wiped out, and all immediate danger of an invasion from that quarter is at an end.

Small Loss of the British.

The number of casualties suffered in the engagement by the British and Egyptians is surprisingly small. Their total loss is seventeen killed and 131 wounded. One thousand Dervish prisoners were captured.

THE VETS AND THE RAILWAYS.

Failure of an Attempt to Get a Cheap Rate to Milwaukee.

MILWAUKEE, Aug. 2.—A delegation of twenty leading citizens were laboring with President Miller yesterday in hopes of securing a 1-cent G. A. R. encampment rate. It is now conceded on all sides that unless the rate is given the encampment gives promise of proving a fizzle. If the St. Paul will give the low rate all the other roads will doubtless follow suit.

Miller Cannot Help Them.

LATER.—President Miller, of the St. Paul road, informed the committee of the Grand Army that he could not aid them in securing a 1-cent rate to the encampment, but said he would not oppose it if favored by the passenger associations of which his road is a member. This intelligence was conveyed to to the executive council at its meeting last night.

Will Have a Big Time, Anyhow.

The result was the passage of a resolution to go on with the preparations, invite all old soldiers to come, and have the big naval battle, besides as large a land parade as possible. Wisconsin has 3,000 grand army men, and of these 11,000 will come in uniform to parade, thus forming a nucleus around which visiting posts can rally, even if they are forbidden to turn out in department form.

HEAVY FAILURE IN SHOES.

A Boston Firm Goes Under to the Tune of $1,250,000.

NEW YORK, July 31.—The trade was surprised yesterday when they heard of the failure of E. & A. H. Bacheller & Co., the Boston shoemakers. The firm is supposed to be the largest manufacturers of shoes in the world, and was estimated to be worth $1,000,000. Their sales were chiefly west and south, and amounted to 12,000 pairs of shoes a day. In the New York market they bought from 30,000 to 40,000 sides of sole leather at a time. One firm here supplied them with 1,000 sides of a certain brand of leather each week. New York banks hold a good deal of the firm's paper.

The liabilities are reported at $1,250,000, with nominal assets of about the same. It is expected that some arrangement will be made by which business will be resumed. Strike troubles with the K. of L. are said to be in some degree responsible for the failure. The firm employed 1,100 hands.

John L. Sullivan Arrested.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—John L. Sullivan was arrested last evening at the Vanderbilt hotel, on a requisition from the governor of Mississippi. Sullivan had heard of the intended arrest, and was preparing to go to police headquarters to surrender himself when the officers arrived with the warrant.

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—Before Judge O'Brien, in supreme court chambers, yesterday morning, John L. Sullivan, the prize-fighter, said he was willing to go south, and the judge ordered that he be turned over to the Mississippi officers, who caused his arrest. He started south last night.

LAWYER BILLINGS FOUND AGAIN.

He Gives Himself Up to the Officials at Waterloo—End of the Waldron Scandal—Devilish Attempt at Arson—A Young Man's First Railroad Ride—Mean Robbery of a Grave Yard—Miscellaneous Criminal Notes.

BLOOMINGTON, Ills., Aug. 1.—There was a sensational occurrence at Kappa, Woodford county, Tuesday, the like of which has never before shaken up that tranquil village. Two well-known women of this city finding life in Bloomington unpleasant, owing to the attentions of the police authorities, have been making little excursions into the country, including Kappa, where they met several of the men of the place, much to the scandal of the virtuous villagers. Monday the women again visited Kappa, met two men, and broke into a school house, where they spent the night.

A Rally of Good Women.

This was too much for the Kappa people to endure, and the town marshal ordered the women to leave the place within twenty minutes. The women flatly refused to do so, and defied the officials and the people of the place. It was not long until the story had gone the rounds among the women of Kappa, and a mob of these gathered and suddenly made an attack on the offenders. They pelted them with decayed eggs, rotten vegetables, and stones, and drove them from the place. They were warned that if they ever returned they would be tarred and feathered, and would be lynched if they persisted in coming. The men who met the women took to the woods and have not yet been seen.

BILLINGS GIVES HIMSELF UP.

He Is Now in the Bastile at Waterloo, Iowa.

WATERLOO, Ia., Aug. 1.—M. E. Billings, who is reputed to have escaped from the sheriff at Gary, D. T., arrived here yesterday. He went to the clerk of the court and got a copy of his bail bond, stating that he wanted it so that if the reports from Dakota should make any trouble he could surrender himself on the charge of murder, for which he was held. He said that the trouble in Dakota grew out of a difficulty over an old case he had there for some Waverly parties before the Kingsley affair.

He said he had secured a judgment of about $12,000 that was in the hands of the court, and against which he had an attorney's lien. The attorney whom he had engaged out there had secured part of this money, and in trying to get it from him Billings was arrested for perjury in swearing out a warrant of arrest. He says, however, that he supposed the case was settled, and he started that night for home. When he saw the papers he found that he was charged with being a fugitive from justice, and he came here at once to fix matters up.

A Diabolical Attempt at Arson.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 1.—Fire-bugs made an attempt to burn the boarding-house of Albert Smith at Duquesne at an early hour yesterday morning. A watchman who had been on duty since the attempt was made to burn some houses a few days ago discovered the fiends at work. They were in the cellar of the house, and he fired upon them. They rushed out, and as they ran away returned the shots, but none of them took effect. An investigation disclosed the fact that preparations had been made to burn the house, which was a boarding-house for the non-union men employed in the Duquesne Steel works. The proprietor had been warned that if he did not close up his house he would be burned out.

Will Remember His First Ride.

FLINT, Mich., Aug. 1.—Patrick Crosby, who has been here since May 9 awaiting examination for the murder of Thomas Murray and his mother, at Argentine, was discharged yesterday, the evidence against him being insufficient. Although 23 years old, Crosby had never been twenty miles from home until brought to jail, and that journey gave him his first ride on a railroad. After his discharge yesterday he made a circuit of the town, and then set out for home, absolutely satisfied with himself and the world.

An Echo of the Waldron Case.

HASTINGS, Mich., Aug. 1.—The trial of Mrs. Nellie Bidwell for adultery, which was to have occurred yesterday, has been withdrawn. She accompanied C. W. Waldron when he absconded with the funds of the Waldron bank last fall, but was deserted when Waldron crossed the Atlantic. Mrs. Waldron withdrew the charges, as she is at present living with her trisky husband.

Kidnapped His Lucky Brother.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Arthur Kay, aged 12, was arrested in Brooklyn yesterday charged with kidnapping his 3-year-old brother. His parents live apart, and he had brought the infant from his father's home in Norwich, N. Y., where he had been visiting, to see his mother, who lives in Brooklyn. The 3-year-old is said to be heir to an estate in Norwich valued at $1,000,000.

A Prospective Wedding Indefinitely Postponed.

MOBILE, Ala., Aug. 1.—Henry Boyce, a carpenter, was shot and killed yesterday morning by Walton Williams. The men had trouble about Mrs. Williams. Williams had agreed to allow a divorce so Mrs. Williams could marry Boyce, but he evidently changed his mind and shot his rival.

Brutal Treatment of Soldiers.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Aug. 1.—Word has just reached here that two Mexican soldiers who deserted from an army post at Ensada, Mexico, were captured fifty miles from there, tied to horses and compelled to walk rapidly the entire distance back to Ensada. Both men died soon after their forced march.

Disgorged Part of His Stealings.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 1.—William Ross, the absconding teller of the Nevada bank of this city, has been arrested at Victoria, B. C., and part of the $100,000 that he embezzled was recovered.

Stole Plants from Graveyards.

CARTHAGE, Ills., Aug. 1.—Persons unknown to the police have been stealing plants from flower gardens and the cemeteries. Large and valuable plants have been carried off in wagons.

Ives and Stayner Get Another Writ.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Ives and Stayner have obtained another writ of habeas corpus, requiring cause to be shown why they are detained in Ludlow Street jail.

The miners along the Monongahela river have determined to resist the reduction to 2½ cents per bushel, and will stand for the 3 cents.

IN GOLDEN PASTURES.

MILLIONS ON MILLIONS OF DOLLARS WORTH OF FINE STOCK.

The Grandest Stock Display Ever Seen in the West—Magnificent Exhibition Preparing for Farmers and Stock Breeders.

The northwest has become within a few years past one of the most noted, if not the most noted, stock breeding sections of the Union, particularly for breeding farm stock—breeds of horses especially for farm work and teaming, breeds of cattle especially for butter, other breeds especially for beef, and others for working oxen; breeds of sheep for wool and other breeds for mutton; and breeds of hogs for the production of the best and most profitable pork. The old time farmers would have laughed at the notion of breeding a special class of horses for farm work, or a special class of cows for butter. Times were when the only idea of improved horses was trotters or racers for the track or road. Any mongrel was good enough for farm work. And the best cattle were "all round," equally for butter, beef and work, instead of a special breed for each.

"BEFORE THE WAR"

the northwest bred some noted trotting and running horses. But the breeding of Percherons, Clydesdales, Shire, French draft and French coach horses for work is a business that has developed since the war. So also is the rearing of sheep from costly flocks of the best blood in Europe and cattle from the best herds not only of Great Britain but of all the countries of Europe. The northwest now has dozens of stock farms and scores of stock breeders with reputations that cover the whole continent, and animals that command princely prices. Such Michigan names as those of William Ball, of Hamburg; James M. Turner, of Lansing; Savage & Farnum, of Detroit, and other noted Michigan breeders are known and honored in all countries where there are herd books, stud books or flock registers, and Ohio and Indiana can boast of many of the same sort. In proportion to her farming, population and her suitable area, of the states and of all countries on this half of the globe as a stock raising state. By the last census the value of Michigan live stock reached the enormous aggregate proportion and value of one-tenth of her entire farm property, or about fifty-six millions of dollars! Only nine states surpassed Michigan in the number of horses, eight in oxen, ten in milch cows, and three in sheep; and each of these states was either larger in suitable cultivated area, older in the business, greater in population and wealth, or with peculiar advantages of climate and soil. The next census is confidently expected to show such an enormous advance in Michigan stock raising as will make her supremacy self-evident.

Popular interest in stock raising, stock improvement, and stock exhibitions is constantly and rapidly increasing, as are also the number and proportions of investments of capital in the business of stock raising of improved breeds. And skill in developing the finest animals is naturally acquired by practice and experience. Most of the various classes of stock breeders have fairs, meetings and exhibitions. They also lend an important part to county, district and state fairs. Sheep shearing festivals and flock shows are common and popular, and show a gratifying annual increase in the number of the best animals with accredited pedigrees. Progress in rearing Jersey, Alderney, Durham, Devon, Dutch Belted, Holstein Freisen, Hereford, polled and other choice varieties of cattle, is also marked and gratifying. While there are no especial shows of improved swine, except at fairs, the number and quality of the most famous breeds are steadily increasing, and the original razor-backed mongrel hog of the early farmers has almost disappeared. But, while stock breeders have displayed many excellent exhibits at fairs and festivals, they have

NEVER HAD AN ADEQUATE EXHIBITION.

At the county, district and state fairs the usual custom has necessarily been to provide stock with limited quarters in unsightly rough board sheds and stalls, strewn with litter, ill-smelling, unattractive, inconvenient and dirty. Cattle and horses have been generally led or driven about a ring that is often foul with mud or cloudy with dust, and the people, momentarily attracted, are presently driven off to more agreeable and cleanly exhibits. Trotting and racing stock have been given the best chances for attractive display, and therefore naturally have occupied the most popular attention. Besides, the local and state fairs have not drawn together enough exhibits of stock from other states and Canada to afford liberal opportunities for comparisons that will accomplish the most good for home breeders. The fair managers have made commendable efforts but they have not been provided with enough capital to furnish first class facilities for stock shows.

The great International Exposition, to be held in Detroit on September 17-27, will afford the stock breeders, farmers and people the first really adequate opportunity for not only of their splendid improved stock of Michigan, but also of numerous and valuable exhibits from the best flocks and herds of Canada and the other states. The stock buildings will be of immense size, elegant, clean, carefully regulated and kept, lighted by electricity, thoroughly watered and provided with every appliance even to the point of luxury, and so arranged that the stock show will be as attractive as possibly to the immense crowds of visitors, and a pleasure even to the most delicate ladies. The display ground will be ample, will be separate from other and disturbing exhibits, and will be in continued use, so that at all hours an exhibition of fine stock will be going on alike upon the show ground and in the stalls, stables and pens. It will undoubtedly be the grandest exhibition of powerful horses and splendid cattle ever seen in the northwest, with scenes constantly realizing Rosa Bonheur's world-famous picture of "The Horse Fair." And the display of sheep and swine will be no less extraordinary. The farmers have never had such an opportunity, and will no doubt take advantage of it by thousands, and reap a benefit from it that will add greatly to their business interests for many years to come. And the managers of fairs will learn valuable lessons as to the best methods for securing, caring for and displaying farm stock.

Besides there will be a splendid display of racing and road horses, and exciting speed contests upon a specially excellent track, so that horses of all classes will be amply provided for. The business energy, enterprise and vast outlay of capital necessary to produce such an exhibition constitutes a public benefit which deserves wide recognition.

THE JOLLY OLD MARINER.

A jolly old mariner sailing the sea
Was roaring a solo and thus thundered he.
"Our ship is as bold as an eagle on wing,
And she carries a cargo that's fit for a king;
A cargo that's welcome to peasant or pope,
Our ship she is laden with IVORY SOAP.

"I've plowed all the oceans to every port,
To visit all nations and climes is my sport;
We carry our goods to the ends of the world,
Our trade is announced on our banner unfurled;
See! blazoned on pennant from top-mast and rope:
'We bring to all people the Ivory Soap.'

"From Procter & Gamble, my lads, do you mind?
We carry a blessing to gladden mankind;
For dirt is a foe to the body and soul,
And soap must precede e'en the gospel's control;
Then hurrah! hip hurrah! for philanthropy's hope,
Hurrah for the advent of Ivory Soap.

"Its bars, like the truth, or a life-saving boat,
Ever rise to the top and triumphantly float;
As the foam on the wind-fretted billow 'tis light,
As the elephant's tusk it is glossy and white;
The poets all praise it in measure and trope,
The ocean is thundering—IVORY SOAP."

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

The MOST PERFECT and PRACTICAL Piece of Farm Machinery

THAT HAS EVER BEEN INTRODUCED.

The mechanical principles embodied in this Mower are entirely new, and have made it possible to remedy the defects that are well known to exist on the old style machines. It will pay any farmer who is in need of a Mower to examine the IMPROVED CHAMPION—the most perfect and practical of machines—

AND IT IS SO WARRANTED!

The DRIVE WHEELS are high and wide apart, insuring steadiness of motion and light draft. There is NO FRAME WORK hanging down in front to bunch up the cut grass or run into obstructions. There is NO FLY WHEEL LOW DOWN on which the grass can wind. This is a serious objection to the old-style mowers. The POWER IS APPLIED DIRECTLY and without a joint from the main gear to the pitman, and ALL OF THE POWER is used in cutting the grass,—none is wasted on loose joints and fast-running gearing. THE PITMAN WORKS ON A STRAIGHT LINE, AND THE POWER APPLIED AT ONE END IS ALL TRANSFERRED TO THE KNIFE. The CUTTER BAR can be folded while the knife is in motion, which is very important where there are stumps or trees. The Cutter Bar may raise or lower at either end, and yet the knife will work perfectly free without binding or extra friction or wear. This in a measure explains why there are no broken knife heels and no broken pitmans on the CHAMPION Mowers.

REMEMBER that the parts that have given the most trouble on the old-style mowers ARE WARRANTED NOT TO BREAK NOR WEAR OUT on this wonderful mower.

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

The Michigan veterans of the late war share the indignation of their comrades in other states over the parsimony of the railways in not granting 'em reduced rates to the Milwaukee encampment, and so resolved to stay at home.

Detectives often do things which, in other people wouldn't indicate the possession of extraordinary acumen. One at Bancroft kept his eye on a pump for four weary hours t'other night under the impression that the thing would develop into a fullfledged horse-thief before making the discovery that he was camping on the wrong trail.

Nearly everything that's good, and some things that aren't are produced in the upper peninsula. A shipment of marble has just been made from a mine near Ishpeming.

Adrian kids develop early. A 10-years-old of that city slashed his mother's arm with a carving knife because she reproved him for some glaring fault.

It's not every ambitious fellow who can become a Barnum or a Forepaugh in the show business. A traveling collection of curiosities struck a Huron county town and drew a goodly sized crowd, but the description bills were evidently so much the work of imagination that the patrons declared hostilities, and the management took to the woods till the clouds should roll by. Upon returning, the proprietors found a broken wagon and a torn tent with which to begin business anew.

A Niles burglar, with a small stock of discretion that betokens a very limited experience at the business, explored the residence of a local parson while the dominie was sweetly dreaming of a paid-up salary, supplemented by a generous donation. (Dreams will persist in being contrary, you know.) In this case, however, the burglar made a heavy haul—a well-worn hymn-book and a pair of shoes in the same condition.

Jackson doesn't propose to sulk and pout over the loss of the state fair, but will drive right ahead and hold a regular gem of an exposition of her own the coming fall. That's the sort of stuff of which successful cities as well as men are made.

A peculiar case of "domestic infelicity" has come to light at Gaylord. A citizen of that town employed a hired man who fell in love with his master's wife, and the pair loved so well, if not wisely, that they drove the lawful husband away by resorting to the shotgun policy, whereupon the neighbors rose en masse and "fired" the guilty parties to parts unknown.

A couple of Tecumseh girls have issued a proclamation to the effect that they can outrow any other two feminines of the state, and that they've got a boat on Devil's lake and are prepared for the contest at a moment's notice.

A Croton family, who had occasion to take a little trip through the adjacent wilderness, came near having a sad experience. While passing through the woods the baby set up a lusty cry which attracted the attention of a big black bear, and it was only by a hard fight that the head of the family kept bruin from making a meal of that baby.

Business has been so dull this summer in the Mio circuit court that the court house has been used by dancing parties to keep the place from getting lonely.

A little Port Austin girl was carrying a needle on her dress, after the fashion of some older folks, when she accidentally fell, the needle penetrating the breast over the heart and breaking off. The attending physician didn't like to risk an operation to remove the broken needle, and the child died on the following day.

An East Saginaw veteran of 84 years, after spending nine years in the fruitless endeavor to secure a pension, walked to Washington for an interview with Uncle Sam. The round trip consumed about two and a half months' time, ten days being spent at the capital. The authorities were agreed that such perseverance should not go unrewarded, and the pension was granted without further delay.

MURAT HALSTEAD'S HEALTH.

He Arrives from Europe in the Pink of Condition—His Voyage.

NEW YORK, Aug. 1.—Mr. Murat Halstead was a passenger by the steamer City of Paris that arrived Wednesday. He told a United Press reporter that his trip from Queenstown was uneventful. "Too uneventful, in fact," he added, "because the weather has been intensely disagreeable nearly all the time."

The reporter hinted at the rumor concerning Mr. Halstead's dangerous condition of health, and it caused him to laugh outright. "I don't see what such a rumor is based upon," said he. "I never felt better in my life than I have recently. The water at Nowheim where I spent the greater part of my time since I have been away, did me a great deal of good, and the rheumatism which troubled me a great deal before going away has almost entirely disappeared.

Don't Look Like a Sick Man.

"Do you think I look like a very sick man?" inquired Mr. Halstead of his questioner, at the same time squaring his broad shoulders.

The reporter took in the glowing face and general sprightly appearance of the field marshal at a glance and answered decidedly in the negative. There was a delegation of local political lights at the wharf to greet Mr. Halstead. Mr. Halstead left the steamer in company with his son Robert. He will stay at the Breevoort hotel, in this city, for a few days before proceeding to Cincinnati.

The Trial of Mrs. Maybrick.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 3.—In the Maybrick trial Saturday Dr. Stevenson testified that all of Maybrick's symptoms indicated the use of arsenic. Maybrick's nurse testified that when the prisoner tried to persuade Maybrick to take his medicine he objected on the ground that the wrong medicine was being offered to him. Witness testified on cross-examination that no improper food or medicine was given to Maybrick while she was attending him. Mrs. Maybrick, she said, appeared to be tender and considerate toward her husband. A waiter at Flatmann's hotel identified Mrs. Maybrick as having occupied a bedroom at the hotel with Brierley.

The prosecution closed its case Saturday, and Sir Charles Russell opened for the defense in a forcible speech wherein he said he would prove that Maybrick had been a confirmed arsenic taker for years.

1492—AMERICA—1892.

BY D. S. CURTISS.

After learning the simple rudiments of reading and writing, the most important topics to be studied by our young people are the history, struggles and founding of our government and nation; and understanding its constitution and political principles.

Hence, whatever memorials and transactions tend most fully to make our youth acquainted with the labors and cost of establishing our nation and government, and ever to keep fresh in their minds and esteem the great value of our country, are most valuable lessons and should be generously encouraged.

DISCOVERY OF THIS CONTINENT.

The grand event which it is proposed to commemorate in 1892—the discovery of the American continent in 1492—is undoubtedly one of the most important epochs in the history of the human race, that civilized men ever assembled to celebrate, when we consider all the vast benefits that result to mankind from its completion, and present character of our government.

Without that discovery of the American continent most of the rich blessings realized from three other noted events could not have been enjoyed; namely, the great Reformations of John Wyckliffe and Martin Luther; the Invention of Type-Printing; and the Invention of Steam Navigation. The conditions of the old continent could not afford and would not admit of the existence and enjoyment of free institutions of religious and political freedom, or of the glorious improvements resulting from those reforms and inventions. More room and opportunity were needed for their developement,

THREE GREAT EPOCHS.

The wise Judge of all the world seems to have specially designed and ordained, in the 14th and 15th centuries, that three great, requisite events and means, to secure in a new and adequate region—on this new continent—a great, permanent democratic republican government, as a light and example of the civilized world, where complete religious and political freedom could be enjoyed by the people and be transmitted to after ages, as long as any were found worthy to possess such privilages.

At nearly the same period, and reasonably co-incident, those great events occurred. Early in the 14th century in England, John Wyckliffe started the reform for a degree of personal freedom against the despotism of the church, by insisting that the civil power should be separated and withheld from the spirtual, that the church should not control and interfere with the temporal and business affairs of the people—that church and state should be kept separate and distinct.

Part of a century later Luther followed up, effected similar reformation in Germany, demanding freedom of thought and person in religous affairs.

INVENTION OF PRINTING.

At that time the instruction and dissemination of ideas and principals could be but slowly done and within very limited bounds, as oral facilities were almost the sole means, aided only by limited manuscript letters; hence, reforms and improvements could progress but slowly. But at once, as if by inspiration, adequate ample means of propagation and promulgation were provided in the invention of printing. Faustus and Guttenburg invented the art of printing books and papers, and thereafter lectures and sermons could be cheaply and largely circulated. Early in the 14th century John Wyckliffe made the first translation of the Bible into the English language; with the printer's art this holy book and all other useful instructions could be widely and quickly disseminated among free minds.

DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.

Now, independent feeling and independent resolves were growing and expanding, and a desire for freedom seemed to need and demand more room and favorable conditions for growth and developement, than the old countries could furnish; at once, as if by Heaven's direction, Columbus set sail and discovered a new continent, America, where religious, political and social freedom could be enjoyed. And to facilitate navigation, emigration more fully, an Italian named Flavion Giovia, discovered or invented the marine compass, rendering emigration from the old to the new world more safe and easy.

Thus these three grand important epochs followed each other in needed, opportune succession; quickly and usefully enough to afford and secure the highest earthly blessings to mankind; to those possessed of the intelligent, liberty-loving energy to accept the boons presented; and they, in turn, with their superior capacities secured the blessings to feebler neighbors.

Thus, we have the three great steps in the history of civilized people, which rendered possible the high and happy, powerful position which our country now occupies.

First—the great reformation which led to freedom of thought and person, in religion and politics. Second—the invention of printing which facilitated circulation of intelligence. Third—the discovery of this continent, which afforded auspicious room and conditions to build a free institutions.

And now the eyes, the anxious watching, of all nations are upon us, scanning our government, curious to see its fate—some friendly, others desiring, expecting our downfall. Some people, just rising from semi-barbarism looking to us with friendly hope and interest, wishing to learn and be benefited by our example and success. And it is our ambition, as it is our resolution, that they shall not be disappointed; but that we in leading and they in following shall command permanent, high success.

The early emigrants of this continent—our forefathers—established a nation here through terrible sufferings, sacrifices and loss of lives, during a distructive war of seven years, from 1775 to 1783, whereby religious and political liberty was secured and presented to us, far more complete than is enjoyed by any other civilized nation. Our government also, has since stood the test of, and came out victorous from wars with two foreign nations, many conflicts with the savage Indians of this country, and from a distructive civil war waged by a portion of the people of our own nation in an attempt to divide or destroy it, but in which attempt they were fully thwarted.

And now, after all of these tests and contests, war with various foes, we stand as firm and permanent as any government under the sun, and are based on hivher and better principles than any other system known among men. The full and proper estimate of the cost and value of our government and nation, with a sacred duty of protecting and preserving it in all of its power, honor and blessing, as against all enemies, is the great and eminent lesson to be taught and deeply impressed upon the minds and purposes of the rising and future generations—that it be secured and transmitted in full power unimpaired through all coming time; to all people who shall prize freedom above despotism—of all who prefer elected rulers to those who come by accident of birth.

MONARCHIES LESS SECURE.

It is not too much to say, in this connection, that there is not a throne in all the monarchies but is less permanent, nor a single crown but is less secure, for the existence and success of our grand and powerful Republic. Our failure, therefore, would weaken the hopes of newer republics, and give additional assurance to all monarchs who hold position and govern by birth-right, and not by the votes of the governed. Our responsibilities, therefore, are equal to our privileges and honors, before the world.

PEACE ARBITRATION.

Our nation having repudiated monarchies and triumphed over their systems and having estimated this great Republic another pre eminent honor awaits us, if we hava the grace, virtue and courage to secure it, whereby may be added to our glorious record, when we shall take the successful steps toward persuading nations to establish a court of congress, whereby all differences may be settled by argument and arbitration instead of by war and deadly conflict—when reason and peace shall reign supreme.

DEATH OF JAMES R. CAIRNS.

James R. Cairns, one of the well-to-do and influential men of Raisin township, as well as one of the successful stock raisers and farmers died at his residence in that township, on Tuesday evening, July 30th, after a long and severe illness. He has occupied a prominent place in the history of Lenawee county. In 1838 he went to the township of Tecumseh, with his father, when he was but six years old.

He was born on the 28th of August, 1832, at Seneca Falls, N. Y., and after the death of his father, remained with his mother and brother until 1846 when he set out to learn the trade of a carpenter, which he followed as an occupation until the breaking out of the war. On the 3d. of November he entered the army as first lieutenant of Company B. Ninth Michigan cavalry. The company was raised in Lenawee county, and was assigned to the army of the Ohio, where it was engaged in resisting the raid of John Morgan through Kentucky, Indiana, and Ohio, and came in contact with that command at Buffington Island, where the Ninth cavalry assisted in capturing most of Morgan's men. During this raid Lieut. Cairns created quite an excitement by marching Col. Basil Duke and Col. DeWitt Howard Smith, with about 100 men, into camp. The only two men with the Lieutenant at the time were Sergeants Doke and Burnett.

The regiment then joined Burnside and went to the siege of Knoxville, and afterwards was at the capture of General Frazer and men, at Cumberland gap. He was in other minor engagements, and remained doing good and faithful service, until he was taken sick and sent to the Fairmount hospital at Cincinnati, at which place he received his discharge on account of physical disability.

Returning home, he turned his attention to farming, locating in the township of Franklin. Subsequently he bought the old Thos. Lovett farm in Raisin, owned at the time of his purchase by Chas. C. Tefft, which he has occupied for the past six years as his family home.

He was appointed Deputy Sheriff under William R. Tayer, in 1871, and served two years. In 1873 he was again appointed deputy under John G. Mason, and served two years. He was elected Sheriff of this county in 1876, his term expiring December 31, 1880. He made one of the best officers Lenawee has ever had.

Mr. Cairns was married in Jackson county on the 16th of August, 1855, to Miss Emily A. Greenleaf, who died recently on her way home from the South.

Mr. and Mrs. Cairns became the parents of eight children, who are recorded as follows: Jennie is the wife of R. S. Wilson, station agent at Flowerfield, Mich.; Ellsworth W. is the representative of the Gale Agricultural Manufacturing Company, of Albion, Mich.; Dora B. and Nora D., twins, reside with their parents, and are highly educated and intelligent young ladies; Sadie N., is also at home attending school. The deceased were Arthur, Florence H., and an infant. Mr. Cairns and family attended the Presbyterian church, while politically he was a Republican in all that the name implies. He was a man who took a lively interest in public affairs, and has done much to give the county the standing that it enjoys among the counties of Michigan. He has been severely ill for a long time, and has been a great sufferer, but he has borne all the pangs of severe sickness with singular fortitude.

James R. Cairns was a man of sterling integrity, and had the power of drawing men to him, and making them his friends. He was ever true to his friends, and for them no labor or sacrifice was too much for him to perform. He will be greatly missed by a large number of people of this county, to whom he had endeared himself by his friendliness, his generosity, and a sort of out-spoken, whole-souled manner which, while entirely unaffected, was all his own, and was one of the most marked features of his character.

The funeral obsequies were held from the family residence in Raisin on Thursday last Aug. 1st., and were conducted by Rev. W. H. Babbitt, the the pastor of the deceased. The members of Beers Post G. A. R. of which he was a member and the first commander, turned out about fifty strong and escorted the remains of their dead comrade to the grave. The beautiful burial service of the grand army was rehearsed at the cemetery. The large number of friends in attendance at the funeral was a silent but emphatic testimonial to the worth of the man whom they followed to the tomb. Capt. Cairns possessed a strength of character and a marked individuality which would have made him a leader in any community where his lot might be cast, and his natural bravery was never more manfully displayed than in his last fight with the disease which finally obtained the mastery. Although his demise had been expected for many months, yet when the hour came, his family and friends could but mourn his loss. But he has gone to meet the loved companion who crossed over the river only a few short months before him. He has bequeathed to his children a record which they can always venerate, and an example which they can always follow.

"O, death, where is thy sting?
O, grave, where is thy victory?"

THE TECUMSEH SCHOOLS.

The public schools of this village will enter upon the work of the fall term, Sept. 2d. 1889. All pupils should be present at the opening of the term and continue until its close. Absence from recitations at any time is detrimental to success. Pupils will be received at any time, however, and classified according to their attainments.

The corps of teachers engaged for the coming year guarantees thorough and careful work. The greatly increased foreign attendance during the past year attests the growing popularity of the schools outside of the district. Candidates for admission to the different grades are not required to undergo any severe examination, only such as to enable the grade of work they are qualified to enter upon with greatest profit to themselves. Those applying for admission to the High School should come prepared to pass an examination in Practical Arithmetic, Spelling, Geography, English Grammar and U. S. History. Non-residents who are not fully prepared to enter the High School will find excellent advantages in the Grammar department.

The courses of study in the High School, three in number, are all laid down upon the basis prescribed by the University. Excellent facilities are offered, therefore, to those who wish to prepare for college. Graduates of our high school, owing to the high standard of work required, have invariably been successful in their examinations for admission to the University. Young people who wish to pursue these studies in which candidates for teacher's certificates are examined, will find excellent opportunities here. Many of the teachers of this and neighboring townships received their preparation here. During the coming year there will be abundant opportunities given for rhetorical work and work in debate This work will be under the direction of the teachers, and it is hoped that pupils will become more proficient in their line of work.

All candidates for admission are requested to present themselves at the Supts. office in the Central Building, for examination on Friday or Saturday at 9 o'clock A. M., August 30th and 31st. All other pupils are requested to be present at the same place at 4 o'clock in the afternoon of either day for the purpose of receiving their classification.

The prosperity of our schools during the past year, under the Superintendency of Prof. E. A. Wilson, has been so marked, that the Board of Trustees look forward to the ensuing year with the utmost confidence that it will eclipse any year since the organization of the union system.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.

The State Teachers' Institute for Lenawee County, will be held at Tecumseh, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M., Monday, August 19, and closing at 4 P. M., Friday, August 23.

Supt. E. A. Wilson, Tecumseh, Local Committee.

The value of the instruction received at these Institutes is being very generally recognized by teachers and school officers. As a rule, it has been the experience of County Examiners and other examining officers, that the most successful teachers are those who have availed themselves of the normal instruction offered by these local Institutes.

The daily sessions of the Institutes for this year will, as heretofore, be devoted exclusively to topics of special interest to teachers, presented by persons of extended practical experience as teachers, and who have made a special study of Institute work. The evening lectures will be of a popular character.

The institute law allows teachers, whose schools are in session at the time appointed for the County Institute, held under the direction of the State Superintendent, to close their schools during the continuance of such Institute without forfeiting their wages for as many half days as they are in attendance at the Institute. This provision of law, and the fact that there will be no tuition or enrollment fee exacted, should insure the attendance of every teacher in the county who possesses the true professional spirit.

Full particulars in regard to board, etc., may be obtained upon application to the local committee.

T. J. Kennedy, of Battle Creek, arrived in town on the C. J. & M. train last Tuesday afternoon with the remains of his wife which were brought here for burial. The funeral was held at the residence of A. E. Kennedy at five o'clock the same day, the services being conducted by Rev. J. Phelps. Mrs. Kennedy suffered a stroke of appoplexy at her home in Battle Creek which resulted in her death on Monday last, at the age of 43 years.

The lawn social announced to be held at Mrs. N. M. Sutton's on the 23d. has been changed to the 16th, next week Friday. The sewing society will assemble in the afternoon. The noon train on the Lake Shore brought in the Adrian company yesterday, and it was met at the Chicago st. crossing by Co. C, who escorted them down to the C. J. & M. depot, where they all took the train for Battle Creek to attend the state encampment. Co. C turned out 60 strong under the command of Capt. Wood, including Hospital Steward, D. T. Hall, Surgeon C. M. Woodward and Regimental Bugler C. F. Skinner. Six of the company belong to the band, and they took their instruments and will furnish music for marching. The boys made a fine appearance in their new uniforms, which are similar to those of the regular army.

Adrian Commandery, Knights Templar, some 40 strong, took the pleasant drive between here and Tecumseh last evening, for the purpose of giving the members of the commandery in that vicinity an opportunity to join them in an outdoor drill. They were met at the outskirts of the village by Tecumseh's band, and escorted into town. A large space on Chicago st. had been sprinkled and rolled for their drill ground, and many other courtesies shown them. At the conclusion of the exercise, Capt. Gen. Howell marched his command into the Lilley House dining room, according to prearrangement, and a kingly banquet was served them by the citizens. The return trip was made by moonlight, and an enjoyable ride it was. The Knights speak well of Tecumseh.—Adrian Times.

Congressman Allen held his West Point and Annapolis examination last Tuesday at Adrian. Twenty-eight young men presented themselves in the morning at the high school room where the examination was held. Examining board was composed of Prof. Austin George, of the State Normal; Prof. C. O. Williams, of Hillsdale College, and Prof. N. H. Hayden, superintendent of the Hudson schools. The medical examinations were made by Dr. R. H. Nelson, of Ridgeway, and Dr. Clifford Kirkpatrick, of Adrian, both members of the pension board. After the medical examination was concluded, all but 16 of the candidates were dropped out, as they did not fulfill the medical requirements. The afternoon was passed in the literary examinations. The names of the successful candidates will be made known in due season. Will E. Hall, and Jas. C. Whedon represented Tecumseh in the contest.

Favors should be returned, and as we have granted many favors to our friends by selling them goods on time, we now ask as a favor that you help us by making prompt settlement of the same and greatly oblige Anderson & Co.

On account of the Knights of Maccabees celebration, which will be held at Muskegon, Aug. 13, the C. J. & M. Ry. will sell tickets at one fare for the round trip, good going from Aug. 11 to 13th inclusive, and good returning until Aug. 17.

The people of Fayette are very much encouraged and elated over their Normal University. It has undoubtedly done excellent work and has already gained a large patronage. The prospects for the coming year are very flattering. Its enrollment will be large and will include the most active and wide-awake young men and women of the country.

The new district telephone manager K. S. Baker, was in Tecumseh last Tuesday looking over our exchange. Mr. Baker helped string the wire and put in the Tecumseh exchange, and has since worked his way up in the telephone business We are glad to note his promotion to his present position and think he will fill it creditably.

On account of the postponement of the opening of the street railroad, the trotting matinee at the Lenawee Co. fair grounds has been postponed till August 10th, at which time there will be four trotting and pacing races, for blankets. The prize blankets are the finest yet offered at any matinee in this county, and are on exhibition at the store of the Wilcox Hardware Co. The races will begin promptly at 1:30 p.m. Saturday, Aug. 10. It is expected a large entry list will make the occasion one of more than usual interest and a liberal patronage is solicited.

Another Italian band—guess after all it wasn't Italian, rather a mixture of America, Ireland and old Hingland. Anyway, it turned up on the streets last Thursday afternoon, headed by Uncle Billy Nixon with his fife. The occasion was Uncle Billy's birthday, and he could blow as loud as he could 82 years ago, and a great deal more musical. Uncle Billy Nixon was one of the first settlers here, and tells some interesting stories of Tecumseh's early history, and may he live to tell them many years from now.

An opportunity seldom offered. Geo. Heesen & Son have arranged with Wm. Connor, who carries no less than twelve trunks of samples in ready-made clothing of every description, equal and in many respects superior to custom made, to open up the same at their store for public view on Wednesday next, Aug. 14. Mothers, this will give you an opportunity to make selections for your children in two and three piece suits, skilts, jerseys, overcoats with and without capes, such as are not usually carried in stock. Young gentlemen, call and see the fall and winter styles of overcoats and ulsters, stout coats, etc. Those making selections need not have them delivered until the cold weather sets in. Remember, Wednesday next the attraction and selections will be great.

A man named Granger is to make three balloon ascensions and parachute drops at Adrian during the Lenawee county fair. If he kills himself once out of three times, it is figured that the attraction will have been an immense success.—Detroit Journal.

There will be two evening lectures at the Baptist church Aug. 21 and 22, during the week of the teachers' institute, on popular subjects. The evening lectures as well as the day sessions are free to all. The day sessions will be held in the high school room at the central building.

The union picnic at Sand Lake yesterday was a perfect success. Putnam's landing never entertained a larger crowd. The weather was fine and a good program was presented. As it is impossible to do justice to the affair in the brief time we have, before going to press, we have concluded to defer a full report till next week.

The Farmers' Social club will meet with O. B. Finch, Friday afternoon, Aug. 16, and the following program will be observed:

Cantata of Mother Goose by the school children.

Question for discussion—Under the existing condition of things at the Agricultural College is it advisable for farmers to send their sons to that institution for an education?

A picnic supper will be provided.

Chas. A. Cook, for the first time in ten years, is shaking hands with his Tecumseh and Raisin friends. He graduated from our high school with the class of 1866, and has been teaching most of the time since. For the past six years he has been principal of the Chicago city high school, and is filling that responsible position to good acceptance.

The series of gospel meetings at Devils Lake will close August 12 with a convention, called for the purpose of discussing the subject of a Chautauqua circle at Devils Lake. The management say that many rumors have been circulated to defeat the enterprise, but they invite the people to come and see for themselves. They ask ten cents a day for the support of the meeting, not ten cents admission.

Mrs. Johnson lost her husband in the Johnstown flood, and taking her four children, the oldest a girl of 15 years, the youngest a babe but 4 months old, she started for Lansing on foot. She walked to Cleveland, O., over 200 miles and drew a small hand cart in which were two children. At Cleveland, Mr. Webber, of Jackson, gave her money to pay her railroad fare to Lansing. How is that for pluck?

The Knights Templar drill Monday evening last attracted much attention. They made a very fine display.

The trotting matinee held at Bills' track last Saturday was quite well attended and a fine trotting program was presented.

Harry Hanford came all the way from Cincinnati to attend the Sand Lake picnic yesterday. He will return to-morrow.

Morris Conklin, of Elmwood Ill., is spending about ten days with old friends in these parts. He took in the union picnic at Sand Lake yesterday.

The National letter file cabinet is the best arrangement yet devised for filing away letters and papers. The business men of Tecumseh are invited to call and examine the cabinet in this office.

Any one who may wish to purchase a new safe should examine into the merits of the Victor. It is absolutely fire proof and is sold at a very cheap figure. Call at the office and get a descriptive circular.

The Lenawee Club of Chicago will hold a basket picnic at Lincoln Park next Saturday at 2 o'clock P. M. We should have taken pleasure in attending this meeting but business engagements render it impossible for us to leave home at that time.

Dr. Bennett can be consulted at the Lilley House on Monday next, Aug. 12; and every four weeks thereafter. There is no physician in all Michigan giving such results on chronic troubles and stubborn cases. Asthma, hay fever, dyspepsia, head and back ache and similar ailments are successfully treated by his new method. He never fails to cure. Go and see how he gets them well.

A. Richard, administrator of the estate of Robert McCook, will sell on the premises, 2½ miles southeast of Clinton, Thursday, Aug. 15th, at one o'clock, the following property: One 3 yr. old colt, 34 sheep, cow, yearling steer, 5 shoats, 2 sows and pigs, veal calf, yearling heifer, half interest in Champion binder, mower, wagon, cultivators, land roller, bob-sleighs, harrow, plow, Fairbank scales, fanning mill, grain cradle, 8 tons hay, 75 bush. oats, etc. Usual terms of sale. Frank Davidson, auctioneer.

The idle man is an annoyance—a nuisance. He is of no benefit to anybody. He is an intruder in the busy thoroughfare of everyday life. He stands in our path and we push him contemptuously aside. He is a cypher in society. He is of no advantage to anybody, he makes them unhappy. He may have an income to support him in idleness, or may "sponge" on his good-natured friends; but in either case he is despised. Young man, do something in this busy, hustling wide awake world. Move about for the benefit of mankind, if not yourself. Do not be idle. Minutes are too precious to be squandered thoughtlessly. Every man and every woman, however exalted or however humble, can do good in this short life—if so inclined. Therefore be not idle.

A GENEROUS OFFER.—The celebrated Dr. Gleason, after a practice of forty years, having during all that time made the cure of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption his special study, has in this time so perfected his treatment as to be able to cure nearly all who suffer from these complaints. Having reached the age of seventy years, he realizes that the time is near at hand when these valuable remedies must be in other hands or become lost to the world. Desiring that his Home Treatment should be within the reach of all, he has placed the prescriptions with the Hall Chemical Company; this company, knowing the wonderful success of the Home Treatment in the cure of all Throat and Lung Troubles, have decided to send the full treatment ON TRIAL to any one who wishes to try it. Dr. Gleason has also written a valuable treatise on these diseases, which is profusely illustrated with finely executed wood-cuts, showing the Head, Throat and Lungs as they are when diseased; it discusses in an able manner the cause and cure of these complaints; it is printed on heavy super-calendered paper and handsomely bound. This book, together with full instructions how to order on trial, will be sent free to all who will write and ask for it. Address

That Pirate Sealer.

The Black Diamond Baffles Your Uncle Samuel.

A CANADIAN SKIPPER'S EXPLOIT.

He Carries the United States Steamer Rush's Prize Crew of One Into a British Port, the Aforesaid Crew Thinking Discretion the Better Part of Valor—A Movement of English War Vessels—Gleeful Canucks.

VICTORIA, B. C., Aug. 5.—There is great excitement here. The schooner Black Diamond arrived Saturday from Behring sea. The particulars of the seizure by the American revenue cutter, as given by the captain, are as follows: "July 11, at 3:30 in the afternoon, we got a catch of fifty-three seals. At 4 p. m. we sighted the revenue cutter Rush. She came up to us and ordered us to heave to. We did so. The chief officer came aboard and demanded our papers. We refused to give them to him, and he then got a screw-driver and screwed off the hinges on the locks in the cabin, took the papers and 105 seal skins, and all the Indian spears and ten bags of salt.

A Prize Crew of One.

"Then he put John Hawkins, an able seaman, aboard, with instructions to us not to interfere, as sailing master. We kept the course for Sitka. The Rush then sailed away, and at 6:15 in the afternoon was out of sight. This was in latitude 56 degrees 16 minutes, and longitude 170 degrees 20 minutes west. As soon as the Rush was lost sight of a southwest course was steered right for Victoria. Hawkins from the start saw it was impossible to attempt to take the charge of affairs in his own hands and consequently lay in his bunk nearly the whole time, not attempting to interfere. July 15 we sighted Ounalaska island and sighted the Rush just leaving the harbor."

Hawkins Accepted the Situation.

John Hawkins, the American able seaman brought down on the Black Diamond, says he was treated kindly by everybody. When he was put aboard the schooner he said to his officers: "Instead of taking her to Sitka they may go to Victoria." They did not answer him. Most of the time he kept in his bunk, sensibly abstaining from interfering. The Rush, when she boarded the Black Diamond, took away the whole of her guns, ammunition, seals, and salt bags.

Does Look a Little That Way.

Mr. Hammley, collector of customs here, says that he is of the opinion, and it is also the general impression, that when Hawkins was put aboard the Black Diamond the people on the Rush did not care whether she came to Victoria or not, as long as she got out of the sea and stopped destroying the seals. Hawkins has told everything to the American consul here, who has wired the Washington authorities about the matter.

BRITISH CRUISERS GO NORTH.

A Movement That May Be Significant of More Trouble.

WINNIPEG, Man., Aug. 5.—A government officer named Bunting arrived here yesterday from Esquimault, B. C. He says that five ships and two torpedo boats of the British Pacific squadron, have gone north to Behring sea with open orders. Two more ships have been ordered to Victoria, and are now on the way. Bunting says the captain of the ship who first brought the news of the seizure of the sealer Black Diamond by the United States cutter Rush, made some statements to Admiral Benedge, after which telegrams were sent to Ottawa and cablegrams to London, the answers to which were received the same day, and the next day the squadron left for the north.

Much Clamor at Victoria.

Great excitement prevails at Victoria, and the people are clamoring for the government to take active measures to prevent any further interference with British ships in the open sea. Bunting states that some of the sealers in the north will fight before they will submit to seizure, they being well armed for such an emergency.

Feeling Good at Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Ont., Aug. 5.—The intelligence of the escape of the British schooner Black Diamond from the American authorities in Behring sea spread like wildfire, and in the various hotels expressions of satisfaction were heard. The impression seems to prevail that the Black Diamond will not be surrendered by the Canadian authorities, as such a course would be in opposition to Canadian sentiment. The vessel, it is admitted, will be liable to seizure if ever discovered in American waters. The minister of customs has telegraphed to Victoria for full particulars of the Black Diamond's escape. Members of the cabinet decline to be interviewed.

Would Be a Three-Handed Fight.

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—The World's Washington special says that in regard to the United States' title to Behring sea Congressman Farquhar, who has made careful inquiry into the matter of the seal fisheries, says that if England were to go to war over the Behrings sea trouble she would have both Russia and the United States to fight, as Russia guaranteed the title to the sea to the United States.

The American Authorities.

WASHINGTON CITY, Aug.—The state department and other officials here say they have heard nothing officially of the escape of the Black Diamond, and decline to talk about the matter.

A Burglar Shot Dead.

BOONE, Ia., July 31.—About 12 o'clock Monday night John A. Peterson, deputy postmaster at Mineral Ridge, a small town eight miles south of here, was awakened by some one trying to get into the store and postoffice. He saw a man reaching into a window that had been broken. Peterson fired and the burglar dropped dead on the outside, shot through the head. An accomplice who was with him escaped. In the morning it was discovered that the dead man was Frank Adamson, aged about 20, son of a farmer living near Mineral Ridge.

Glass Works Burned at Kokomo.

INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 1.—Three departments of the Diamond plate-glass works at Kokomo, Ind., were destroyed by fire Wednesday morning. Loss estimated at $40,000; insurance, $20,000. The works covered four acres and it required hard work to save the remainder of the plant.

Gehres Is a Pretty Slick One.

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 5.—J. A. Gehres, a young contractor of this city, began building a house on St. Clair street Friday for Adam Schorndorf. After putting in one day's work on the job Gehres secured $1,000 from Schorndorf on the contract, and that night eloped with the latter's wife. Gehres leaves a wife and four children.

CHICAGO, Aug. 3.—Yesterday's game between the Anson athletes and the League "infants" from Cleveland was phenomenal in the number of innings required. The clubs were tied in the ninth inning, neither got a run in the next three, while each got three in the thirteenth, losing again. The winning run was made in the fifteenth. League scores were: At Chicago—Chicago 8, Cleveland 7; at Washington—Washington 6, Boston 10; at New York—New York 7, Philadelphia 0; at Pittsburg—(first game) Pittsburg 5, Indianapolis 9; (second game) Pittsburg 5, Indianapolis 10. DISOBEDIENCE OF ORDERS.

A Reckless Conductor Responsible for a Fatal Wreck.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Aug. 5.—A fatal accident occurred on the Virginia Midland road near Burleys early yesterday morning. Two freight trains collided on a heavy grade. The engines were smashed and the cars almost entirely destroyed. Fireman Fox, of Washington, was killed. Charles Davis, the engineer of the south-bound train, was fatally hurt. He lived at Alexandria. His legs and arms were broken, and he was injured internally. A brakeman named Laser was injured about the hands. Engineer Hayes and Brakeman M. A. McDonald are missing, and are supposed to be under the wreck. Fireman Kelly and Brakeman McClain, both of Alexandria, were also badly injured.

The Conductor Disappears.

Conductor Burnham, of the south-bound train, has disappeared entirely. It is reported that he disobeyed orders in not taking a siding at the bottom of the grade, and that the accident is directly attributable to his disobedience.

CYCLONE IN THE "POCKET."

Newburg, in Southern Indiana, Reported Wrecked.

EVANSVILLE, Ind., Aug. 5.—A severe storm swept across the river near Newburg late last night, doing great damage. A large chair factory in Newburgh was torn to pieces and several fine residences destroyed.

It is reported that almost the entire town has been swept away, but this can not be verified. The track of the storm is through a region in which few telegraph or telephone wires penetrate and no particulars are yet obtainable.

Three Young Ladies Drowned.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 1.—A special to The News from Iron Mountain, Mich., says: Miss Lizzie Farrell, daughter of one of Norway's most prominent citizens, with two young women friends, Miss Anna McCabe, of Depere, and Miss Alice McGillan, of Escanaba, were boat riding Wednesday morning on the Menominee river near Norway. The skiff became unmanageable and was swept over the falls, and all three of the occupants were drowned. Their bodies have not yet been recovered.

Horrible Brutality to a Mule.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., July 31.—John Morguson, John Ferguson and William Day were engaged with a thrasher at Broad Ripple last Saturday. One of the mules used for moving the machine was very balky. Continual urging made the beast more stubborn than ever, and they then tied a rope around its tongue to lead it along. The animal still refused to go, and the men actually pulled its tongue out of its mouth in the effort to force it along. They have been arrested.

Big Strike in the Coke Region.

PITTSBURG, Aug. 2.—A strike was inaugurated in the Connellsville coke region yesterday, and a dispatch says that the works now idle include over 3,500 ovens and give employment to about 6,000 men, or about one-half the coke-workers in the Connellsville region. The leaders of the strike are very confident of success, claiming that it is a question of bread with them. At a meeting of the general committee yesterday arrangements were made to carry on a long struggle.

Iowa Grand Army Men.

DES MOINES, Ia., Aug. 1.—A committee of the G. A. R., representing the posts of Des Moines and central Iowa, met here yesterday to decide on a route to the encampment at Milwaukee. They telegraphed Department Commander Smith, asking him to recall the circular advising soldiers not to go to Milwaukee. Grand Army men in several places in Iowa have done the same, and there is a general belief now that the boycott was ill-advised.

NEW YORK, Aug. 5.—Thomas A. Edison and wife sailed Saturday for Havre on the La Bourgogne.

A Woman's Discovery.

"Another wonderful discovery has been made, and that too by a lady in this country. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." Thus write W. C. Hamrick & Co., of Shelby, N. C.—Get a free trial bottle at

Effects of Modern Life.

Eminent authorities unanimously agree that the high pressure methods of modern life are rapidly making us a race of helpless invalids—subject to all manner of nervous affections, headaches, insanity, dizziness, neuralgia, backache, hysteria, nervous troubles of the heart, stomach, kidneys, brain, etc. Ladies and gentlemen who are thus afflicted, or who are compelled to keep late hours, do much mental or physical work who worry or fret about business or domestic troubles, should remember that no other remedy in the world will so speedily cure these diseases, remove worry and the blues, induce tranquil sleep, relieve pain, or build up the brain and nervous systems, as Dr. Miles' great discovery, the Restorative Nervine. It contains no opium or morphine. Trial bottles free at Baker & Hall's Drug Store.

SAMUEL'S LAST ADDRESS.

LESSON VI, THIRD QUARTER, INTERNATIONAL SERIES, AUG. 11.

Text of the Lesson, I Sam. xii, 1-15—Commit to Memory Verses 14-15—Golden Text, I Sam. xii, 24—Commentary by the Rev. D. M. Stearns.

[Compiled from Lesson Helper Quarterly by permission of H. S. Hoffman, publisher, Philadelphia.]

After the servant passed on leaving Saul and Samuel alone, Samuel took a vial of oil and anointed Saul captain over the Lord's inheritance, at the same time telling him of several events which would happen to him as he returned home; all of which signs came to pass that day.

1. "And Samuel said unto all Israel." The place of today's lesson is Gilgal, the first camping ground of Israel in the promised land, after they crossed the Jordan, where the twelve stones from Jordan were set up, the people circumcised and the reproach of Egypt rolled away, the passover kept, and Joshua's headquarters from which he set out and to which he returned as he subdued the land; where, also, they had just now been offering sacrifice and renewing the kingdom. (Chap. xi, 14, 15.) This election of a king being a rejection of God (chap. x, 19) and a new departure in their history, may be the reason why Gilgal was selected rather than Shiloh or Kirjath-jearim, where the tabernacle and ark of the covenant were.

2. "And now, behold, the king walketh before you." When Samuel says in the first verse that he had hearkened unto their voice and made them a king he was speaking as God's representative, for in verse 13 he says, "The Lord hath set a king over you;" and whatever Samuel did he did as God's servant and as in His sight; if the new king would do likewise all might yet be well.

3. "Witness against me before the Lord." With all his life from his youth up lived before the people, he now asks them to testify if they have ever known him to defraud, or oppress, or take a bribe.

4. "Thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken aught of any man's hand." Surely here is a righteous man, one against whom, like Daniel, they could find none occasion nor fault; for as much as he was faithful, neither was there any error of fault found in him (Dan. vi, 4).

5. "The Lord is witness against you." Their testimony to Samuel's faithfulness was their own condemnation; his faithfulness testified against their unfaithfulness; their acknowledgment of his righteousness was their own evidence against their unrighteousness; to believe God is to condemn self.

6. "It is the Lord that advanced (appointed, R. V.) Moses and Aaron, and that brought your fathers up out of the land of Egypt." Samuel would now keep them face to face with God and remind them of His love to them and His gracious dealings with them.

7. "Now, therefore, stand still, that I may reason with you before the Lord of all the righteous acts of the Lord." Or as in verse 24, consider how great things he hath done for you, and therefore fear the Lord, and serve him in truth with all your heart.

8. "Your fathers cried unto the Lord, then the Lord sent Moses and Aaron." Samuel reminds them first how God heard the cry from the iron furnace of Egypt and delivered them and brought them into the land of Canaan. This great deliverance from cruel bondage and gift of a land flowing with milk and honey ought to have been enough to bind them forever to such a deliverer in the most loving and grateful service, but alas for human ingratitude; and are not Christians today just as bad, when so many who profess to have received the forgiveness of sins and deliverance from the bondage of Satan seem so ungrateful that, instead of serving the Lord constantly and wholly, they do not even seem to acknowledge Him as their Lord, or think their deliverance worth mentioning.

9-11. "They forgat the Lord their God; * * * they cried unto the Lord; * * * the Lord sent and delivered." This covers the history of the nation for about 450 years, or from the first of the judges until Samuel (Acts xiii, 20), when, notwithstanding their oft repeated transgressions, forsakings and idolatry, as soon as they truly repented and cried unto the Lord, He sent them judges who delivered them and caused them to dwell in safety. How sad that they should forsake, forget and grieve such a gracious God, but how wonderful that He should again and again forgive them and shower His mercies upon them.

12, 13. "Now therefore behold the king whom ye have chosen, whom ye have desired." God had given them the desire of their hearts and they now had a king like other nations, but it was on their part a departure from a sole reliance upon God, and a putting of a man in His place. The same sin is manifest now when the people of God in any way lean on an arm of flesh rather than on the almighty arm of the unseen but ever present Lord Jesus Christ. Ask yourself, dear reader, which you in your experience prefer, some one or something seen and tangible, or the unseen God and His sure promises. If Jesus is to you in reality the friend whom you sing about and in whom you find more than enough to supply your every need then you must be in the eyes of many a very peculiar person, but I have no doubt a very happy person and a great blessing to many. Is it so, and are you content to have the Lord alone as your Lord, your portion, all your desire? Or while bearing His Name as one of His redeemed have you chosen some other Lord to have dominion over you, so that you may be like other people? Are you as a professing Christian ever found a slave to the theatre, the opera, the card table or to any worldly fashion or folly or besetting sin? If so you cannot find fault with Israel for choosing a king instead of Jehovah, and you had better remember that "To whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey." (Rom. vi, 16.)

14, 15. "Continue following the Lord your God." Although they have sinned, and God has given them their desire, yet here is a way of blessing still left to them. If they and their king will fear the Lord as Samuel did, and serve Him and obey His voice, and not rebel against Him, then the hand of the Lord will still be upon them for good; but if not, His hand will be against them as in the days of the judges. They had done wickedly in asking a king, yet Samuel encourages them to return to the Lord and serve Him with the whole heart, not turning aside after vain things which cannot profit; and if they will do this he assures them that he will not cease to pray for them; but will teach them the good and the right way; but otherwise they shall be consumed. (See vs. 16-25.) Jehovah must and will be magnified, either in blessings upon an obedient people or in judgment upon the unbelieving. The day is coming when all His enemies shall be subdued, everything exalted against Him brought low, and the Lord alone exalted in that day. (Isa. ii, 11, 17.) If we are now children of God by faith in Christ Jesus and would antedate the joys of the kingdom, let us resolutely turn aside from all vain things which cannot profit, and serve the Lord in truth with all our hearts. Let not the question concerning this or that be, "Is there any harm in it?" but rather, "Is there any profit in it, and will it tend to magnify my Saviour?" If not, it is a vain thing, and the child of God, who knows no king but Jesus, has no time for things unprofitable.

A Sound Legal Opinion.

E. Bainbridge, Munday Esq., County Atty., Clay Co., Tex. says: "Have used Electric Bitters with most happy results. My brother also was very low with Malarial Fever and Jaundice, but was cured by timely use of this medicine. Am satisfied Electric Bitters saved his life."

Mr. D. I. Wilcoxson, of Horse Cave, Ky., adds a like testimony, saying: He positively believes he would have died, had it not been for Electric Bitters.

For actual settlers this is an opening that will hardly be offered again during the lifetime of this great Republic.

HOW CAN PARENTS

allow their children to cough and strain and cough and calmly say: "Oh! it is only a little cold," and keep giving them cheap and dangerous medicines, until they are down with lung fever or consumption, when they can be so easily relieved by BEGGS' CHERRY COUGH SYRUP? It has no superior, and few equals. J. J. ORR, Druggist.

WHAT ON EARTH

Is the reason people will not, can not, or do not see any difference in cheap nostrums put up by Cheap John houses or irresponsible parties at enormous profits, rather than take a medicine of world wide reputation and one that is giving universal satisfaction at equal price? No! medicine in the world is giving such unparalleled satisfaction for purifying the blood as BEGGS' BLOOD PURIFIER & BLOOD MAKER, and every bottle that does not do its work will cost you nothing.

J. J. ORR Druggist.

LONG LIFE.

There is nothing in the world more generally desired than long life, yet the majority of people put off caring for their health—not because they are really careless, but because we live our lives at such a race we have not time to give the subject sufficient thought until we receive a reminder in the shape of a severe illness.

Then, too, we are constantly bewildered by the various schools of medicine, and the physicians who represent them, and often blunder in our choice of a doctor.

If people only knew that the very best health-keeper, life-preserver, and disease preventer that has yet been discovered, is simered down into a concentrated and very palatable form in the shape of New Style Pleasant Taste Vinegar Bitters, they would not hesitate a moment to try it.

But they do not know. How can they know, when so many not only worthless, but positively injurious drugs are constantly flooding the market under various names and guises, that the New Style Vinegar Bitters is as bad as any of them.

They do not know, of course, unless they have courage to try the New Style. It straightens out a tangled-up system in a very short while, and those who buy it once buy it always.

Why dont you try it, reader? It is sent out by a responsible house, and is exactly as represented. It costs but one dollar for a very large bottle. Try it at once and you will never be so glad of anything in your life. Your druggists may not have it, but he will order it for you. Be sure it says New Style Pleasant Taste on carton and bottle before you take it. Try it, and you will feel happier than if you had found a gold mine—of health.

WRITING MACHINE CABINET and OFFICE DESK

For Remington, Hammond, and Caligraph Writers

The advantages of this Type-writer and Office Desk over all others specified in Combination Cabinets are:

First.—The ease and simplicity with which the desk is changed from a library or Office Desk to a Type-writer Table. This change is effected by raising the lid covering the machine back in the rear of cabinet—it being a roller top—sweeping it entirely from sight, thus securing the entire available head and sounding board of the operator. The inside of the top is perfectly clean, as it is covered, and forms a complete writing desk, when the machine is not in use.

The table on which the machine rests is so counterbalanced by our patent adjustments that it needs but a slight touch to fix the machine in position.

Second.—The advantages of the swinging table. The table is so hung that when the machine is brought in place for use, it does not depend on ropes or hangers at rear of cabinet for support, but is held rigidly in place by its own weight, and made impossible for the machine to be tipped down or incline in back of desk by the pressure of a rear support. The machine rests on patent springs which keeps the machine in place, and can be drawn out beyond the desk, well under the operator's hand.

Third.—The construction of the lid closing machine space makes it air tight, and the table having felt around its boarders thoroughly protects the machine from dust.

Fourth.—The foot rest and the construction of the table adjustments makes the desk as ridged as though the top was one solid board, which is a matter of great importance to those who find type-writing table is required. No operator can do good work on a shaky table.

Lastly.—The cabinet is a splendid piece of cabinet work. We manufacture them in Walnut, Antique Oak, Natural Oak, Natural Cherry, Cherry imitation, Mahogany and Ash.

Agents wanted to sell these cabinets, and where we have no agencies established we will sell direct from our works at wholesale prices.

Why Should I Go to Montana?

Great Reservation. Because 18,900,000 acres of free government land, with a delightful climate and equally suited for general farming and stock raising, have just been opened to the homeseeker, in the Milk River valley and near Benton and Great Falls.

Stock Raising. Because the favorable climate and superior grasses of Montana make it the natural home of horses, cattle, sheep and other domestic animals; and because winter feeding is not required, as stock grazes at large the year around.

General Farming. Because a rich soil and abundant summer rains produce wheat, oats, rye, barley, and the grasses and vegetables of a quality, size and yield unsurpassed.

Mining. Because Montana produces more of the precious metals than any other state or territory, and abundant opportunities remain to secure valuable properties at nominal cost.

Immigration. Because the Great Reservation is the meeting point of settlers from the Pacific Coast and from the Eastern States and is the only extensive tract of good land left, suitable for settlement.

Business. Because the rapidly growing towns along the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Ry. offer splendid opportunities to engage in business.

Manufacture. Because the 1,000,000 horse-power water power at Great Falls, the extensive coal veins, the wool, mineral and grain raising resources of Montana offer exceptional opportunities to the manufacturer.

Tourist. Because the canon of the Gates of the Mountains, the Great Falls of the Missouri, the Giant Fountain and Continental Divide offer the most sublime and diversified scenery to be found on the continent. Take a summer tour.

Why Travel by the St. P., M. & M.? Because only by it can you travel through the largest body of free land left for settlement. Because it reaches the Great Falls, with the largest water power on the continent. Because it reaches Helena, the richest city of its size in the world, and because it is the shortest and best route to Butte, the largest mining camp on earth. Special tourists' and landseekers' rates. Daily trains through solid to Montana. Choice of three routes to the Pacific coast. Find out all about it by writing for "The Great Reservation," and "Tourists' Summer Guide." For further information, rates, maps etc., apply to F. I. WHITNEY, G. P. & T. A. ONE OF US TWO.

The day will dawn when one of us shall hearken
In vain to hear a voice that has grown dumb,
And moons will fade, noons pale and shadows darken—
While sad eyes watch for feet that never come.

One of us two must some time face existence
Alone with memories that but sharpen pain,
And these sweet days shall slips back in the distance
Like dreams of summer dawns in nights of rain.

One of us two, with tortured heart half broken,
Shall read long treasured letters through salt tears,
Shall kiss with anguished lips each cherished token
That speaks of those love crowned delicious years.

One of us two shall find all light, all beauty,
All joy on earth a tale forever done;
Shall know henceforth that life means only duty
O, God! O, God! have pity on that one.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

CAPT. DUCK.

Capt. Duck was a Modoc Indian, with the shortest possible legs. His legs were so short that when he walked he waddled along like a very fat duck. And that is why he was called Capt. Duck at the stage station, which was at the foot of the great white mountain in the heart of the Modoc country, Mount Shasta. Some said his legs had been shot off in a battle. And then some said his legs had been eaten off by a bear. But I do not very well see how that could be, for his feet were there, all right. And very big feet they were, too; wide and big and flat like ducks' feet. So I think he must have been born that way.

Poor Capt. Duck could not hunt very well, or go on the war path with the other Indians, and so he came to the stage station to hire out with the few rough men who kept the old log fort and took care of the stage horses there.

These men did not like the old Indian, but as they were a lazy set, they were glad to have him at the fort to rub down and water the stage horses when the sun was hot or there was frost in the air. But they made all sorts of sport of the poor Indian. And, indeed, they laughed at him so much, and made so much fun of his short legs and big feet, that he often wished he was dead. For he was very sad and sensitive.

One day, Big Dan the stage driver left at the station a little boy whose father and mother had died; for the boy had no money to pay fare further. The rough, lazy men there put him to work with the Indian, and they named him "Limber Tim," because he was so slim and limber. And then they did not know his name. But I suppose that would have made no difference, anyway; for, in the mountains of California, they name folks just what they please. And if a boy looks as if his name ought to be "Limber Tim" or "Timber Slim," or anything of that sort, why that must be his name and he can't help it.

The little orphan boy was sent out every day with the short legged Indian, up on the side of the mountain, to herd the stage horses and keep guard over them. He had a belt, and a pistol in it, and a bowie knife in it; and also a gun to carry on his shoulder.

Pretty soon he came to like this very much and began to grow like a weed and get fat. He and the Indian were the best friends in the world. But the men of the station, somehow, were harder and harsher than ever.

But Capt. Duck and the boy did not mind it so very much now, for each had a friend—a friend in the other.

They would buckle on their pistols as soon as it was daylight and they had had a little breakfast of crackers and broiled bear meat or venison, and, each mounting a horse and driving the others, they would go up on the mountain side and there, by a little grove of thick wood, they would stop and let them graze all day. Sometimes Limber Tim would go to sleep on a warm, flat rock, while he was supposed to stand guard and look away to the right and to the left for Indians on the war path. But Capt. Duck would never betray him.

Every time that Big Dan, the stage driver, came by he would make all sorts of fun of Capt. Duck, as he hobbled about and hitched up the four stage horses, while the driver sat high up in the box and snapped his long whip.

The Indian did not like Big Dan, and Big Dan did not like the Indian. Dan said the Indian was a spy, and told the men at the stage station that some night Capt. Duck would set fire to the place and run away by the light of the blaze.

One hot day, as he sat on the box with the four lines in his hand ready to start off at a gallop down the great mountain, he told the Indian, with an oath, to "waddle in on his duck legs" and get him a drink.

The Indian did not move. Then Dan struck him with his whip. The men standing around roared with laughter. Still the sad faced cripple did not move. Then Dan struck him another cut across the face.

The Indian's brow grew dark and terrible, but he did not stir. Some one else brought the drink, and then, the driver snapping his whip, the stage dashed away down the mountain and left the Indian standing there, with the boy tenderly wiping his friend's bleeding face and speaking kind and pitiful words to him. The two friends went up on the mountain side by the little pine grove, and watched the horses as before, and the Indian never spoke at all of what had happened.

A month or two went by and everybody forgot about the trouble between Big Dan and the sad faced savage. Everybody, did I say?

One day the stage came thundering in with Big Dan, the driver, leaning forward helpless on the box. There had been a shot fired from the thick wood back upon the mountain side. The man was dying and the four reins were slipping through his helpless hands.

Who could have fired that shot? When the stage driver was dead and buried some of the men took Limber Tim aside and asked him whether he had been all the time with Capt. Duck the day the shot was fired.

"All the time, every minute, every second," answered the lad, earnestly. For he had no suspicion at all that Capt. Duck had shot the stage driver. Indeed, the boy believed what he said, and would have maintained it at any hazard. He forgot that he had fallen asleep on the warm flat rock that cool autumn day.

The next summer signal fires were seen one night on the mountain tops. The men at the stage station hastened to fasten the old log fort. For this, they knew, meant war. The Modocs were on the war path.

The men made their guns ready and gave Limber Tim an extra pistol to put in his belt, so that he might fight with all his might and help save their lives. But when they came to look for Capt. Duck next morning he was gone. He had joined the Indians.

Then the men at the stage station were very much afraid, for they had been very cruel, not only to the cripple, but to all the Indians, and they knew that if they fell into their enemies' hands they had no right to expect any mercy at all.

The next night the Indians set the woods on fire, and all the land was dark with smoke. The great pine trees were falling across the road, and no soldiers nor anybody could come to help the men shut up in the little log fort, and surrounded by the blazing forests.

The men looked one another in the face as the air grew dark and dense from the smoke, and shook their heads sadly—for they believed their time to die had come.

About 10 o'clock one morning the Indians appeared behind the stables and began to fire on the fort. They took the horses out, mounted them and then set fire to the stables.

And now there was little hope, for the flames would spread to the fort, and then all must perish. The smoke was so dark and thick that the men were almost choked. They could not see to shoot the Indians, for it was like night.

"What can we do?" cried the men shut up in the fort, and hiding their eyes from the smoke. "The Indians will not come near enough for us to see them and fight. If we go out to find them we shall be shot down from behind the rocks and trees, and not one of us will live to tell the tale."

"Let me go out!" said little Limber Tim. "If I can find Capt. Duck, I will save you all."

They hurried the boy through the great wooden gate of the fort, as he tied a white towel on a ramrod and held it high over his head in the thick smoke. Then the men bolted the great gate and left the brave little fellow to do his best with his white flag.

By and by the boy with the white flag on the ramrod came pounding at the gate, and the men gathered around wild and eager as they opened it.

"What luck? What hope?"

"Well, if you will all leave your guns and go out one at a time down the stage road and never come back here any more, you can go."

"Never come back here any more?" cried one man as he jumped toward the gate, "catch me comin' back here any more, if I ever get out of this!" and he leaped out through that gate like a newly sheared sheep leaping over the bars.

Then another followed and another, all feeling very much ashamed of the way they had treated the boy. But somehow they did not have the manhood to hold up their heads and say so.

When the men had gone, glad to go and never thinking of looking back or ever returning to the Modoc country, Capt. Duck came hobbling in. The Indians helped Tim to put out the fire and then went away, taking all the stage horses and guns and blankets with them. So, when the soldiers came, three days after, they found only these two in charge of the fort—little Limber Tim and Capt. Duck.

The government left some soldiers there after that, and Limber Tim was made station master by the stage company!

He was the youngest station master, I suppose, that ever was on the border.

When I passed by there, last year, on a visit to my parents in Oregon, I saw him once more. But he is a man now. He has long hair, a small black mustache, and wears two pistols in his belt; for the frontier ways prevail in that country still.

As for poor Capt. Duck, he is shorter in the legs than ever, I think. His face is deeply wrinkled now, and his long black hair has turned as white as are the shining snows of mighty Mount Shasta when seen against the cold, blue sky above. He never speaks to any one. But he loves Limber Tim with all his heart, and never is long away from his side nor out of his sight if he can help it.

Capt. Duck was sitting in the chimney corner by the great log fire, smoking his pipe, when I saw him last. He was looking straight into the fire—thinking, thinking. And what was he thinking about? Maybe he was thinking about the dead stage driver who had struck him with a whip. It may be so. It may be so.—Joaquin Miller in St. Nicholas.

A Classic.

Most parodies are cheap. They have not even the merit of satirical purpose. Once in a while, however, we find one that is so nonsensical on its surface and so exquisite in its deeper meaning that it belongs among the American classics. By the way, we should like to know who wrote the following verses. Can anybody tell us?

He killed the noble Mudjokivis,
With the skin he made him mittens,
Made them with the fur side inside;
Made them with the skin side outside.
He, to get the warm side inside,
Put the inside skin side outside;
He, to get the cold side outside,
Put the warm side fur side inside;
That's why he put the fur side inside,
Why he put the skin side outside,
Why he turned them inside outside.

WONDERFUL MUSIC.

MUSICAL ART, ARTISTS AND EDUCATION IN THE WEST.

Immense International Band Convention in September—Series of Unequaled Grand Concerts—Forty Famous Soloists—The Greatest Religious Painting of the Age Coming to Detroit.

Everybody has seen engravings or chromos of the spirited American painting that heralded the great American Centennial Exposition of 1876 in Philadelphia, entitled "The Spirit of '76." Everybody remembers the figure of the old Revolutionary War veteran, with his white hair streaming in the wind, stepping gallantly out on the Fourth of July, rattling the old snare drum with angular flourishes of his antique sticks—his face all alive with the fire of patriotism—supported by the old-time fifer and the veteran flag-bearer, as they stride to the old war music down the village street in the early morning sunlight.

That picture represents the musical cultivation of the west in general before the War for the Union. In those days the village fifer and drummer constituted "the band," and the village choir and cheap "singing school" furnished the musical education. The popular songs were those of Christie's minstrels, embracing the still famous and still unequalled melodies of Foster's "Way Down Upon the Swanee River," "Old Kentucky Home," "Old Dog Tray," "Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground," etc., that for simplicity and pathos have never been surpassed by the common airs of any country. But how crudely we did use to murder them!

Then came the war; and, at its close, scores of military bands, with "SONOROUS METAL BLOWING MARTIAL AIRS," celebrated the salvation of the Repuolic. A wealth of new patriotic music poured over the nation from composers whose imaginations were fired by the enthusiasm of battle and victory. "Kingdom Coming," "Rally Round the Flag," "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, the Boys are Marching," "Dixie," "John Brown's Body," and that pulse-quickening favorite that still holds its undiminished popularity, "Marching Through Georgia," were among the rich gifts of the time.

These facts gave the needed impetus to western musical education. There has been

A WONDERFUL CHANGE IN THE WEST.

Now every city and almost every village is supplied with bands, orchestras and teachers. Music stores abound. Every well-to-do home has its piano. Music is regularly taught in the public schools.

GERMAN SANGERFESTS

are annual occurrences, at which, the most eminent artists to be obtained on this continent, including the greatest foreign celebrities, appear. But the more popular form of musical festival in which the still uncultivated multitude delight is the band contests that occur annually, at which not only really fine bands, but also many good soloists on various instruments compete for honors and prizes. Opera that, in the old times, was seldom heard, and drew but a meager support, has become popularized, especially in its lighter forms. But it must be confessed that still predominates, and a really first class band tournament or contest is a great drawing card. Hitherto such tournaments have been confined to state bands, and western bands have had no opportunities to contest and compare with the crack bands of other states and countries, which the people have heard only in concerts given by traveling organizations from abroad.

Now, however, at least we may expect a really international and inter-state band contest, in which the best bands of Canada, Ohio, Indiana, and other states will compete with the bands of Michigan, and the whole be mingled with a series of grand concerts by the most celebrated military band of this continent—Cappa's band of the famous fashionable and wealthy Seventh New York regiment. This far-famed band has been engaged to give daily and nightly concerts at the buildings and grounds of the Detroit International Exposition during the great fair, September 17th to the 27th, and the management are arranging for a grand international band tournament to conclude by a combined concert by all the competing bands, led by Cappa's. Besides Cappa is engaged to bring with him, in addition to his large band, not less than to be found in the United States. These will include not only those who are well known and famous from having performed through the country with Thomas, Gilmore and other noted leaders, but also many artists of the highest skill and fame never before heard in the west. This expected musical treat has naturally set all tongues to wagging, and it will be strange, indeed, if the music-loving public do not set all their feet to marching to the wild music of bugle and horn and the stirring strains of the cornet. Not even Buchanan's famous could stir a Scotch crowd so magnetically as a hundred bands, led by Cappa's, all playing "Marching Through Georgia" together, and following that with "Dixie" and "God Save the Queen," can enthuse a hundred thousand listening Americans and Canadians. Outside of the musical effect, the very sight of such a multitude, so stirred, will be a wonder long to be remembered! The large cash prizes offered—$500 to the first; $300 to the second; and $200 to the third, with the Exposition medals and championships to the winners each in its particular territory—render certain a very large competition, and will make the affair a popular musical event.

"TWENTY PIPERS AND A' O' THEM FU'"

Western artists and art lovers, and religious people, are all expectation over the promised advent of Poore's splendid great painting of which has been secured for exhibition at the Detroit International Exposition art gallery, September 17th to 27th. This large picture is one of the finest produced by any American artist of recent years. It is especially remarkable for its religious power. The painting represents the shepherds, about their watchfire in the desert, watching and discussing, with fervent awe, the brilliant miracle of the appearance of the Star of Bethlehem, heralding the birth of Christ. In the picture the miraculous star hangs its brilliant wonder above the central horizon, and lends strange glory to the soft atmosphere of the oriental night in the desert, mingling mystically with the light of the watchfire and the glimmer of the stars. The sheep are scattered about the landscape and around the fire, shading away into the dimness. The main group is on the right center of the canvas. Here three shepherds—an old man and two young men—lean against a bank, upon which all attention is directed. A third shepherd—a young man sheltering a lamb in his cloak—lies upon the bank in an attitude of weariness and awe, listening to the discussion. On the left, in the foreground, are several other shepherds, watching the star with too absorbed an interest to talk. The painter has portrayed the soul of the scene with a power that stirs in each religious bosom thoughts of unutterable things that cause the strange scene to linger long in the memory like the vision of a holy dream.

"THE NIGHT OF THE NATIVITY,"

EARNESTLY DISCUSSING THE SKYEY MIRACLE,

Emperor William Received in England.

LONDON, Aug. 3.—Emperor William, of Germany, reached Portsmouth in his yacht Hohenzollern yesterday morning. He was welcomed by the Prince of Wales, who went to meet him in the royal yacht Osborne. Great crowds of people lined the shores, and the vessels in the harbor fired salutes. The queen, in receiving the emperor at Osborne, did so with every demonstration of affection, kissing him on both cheeks. Last night the vessels of both the English and German fleets off Cowes and Osborne were brilliantly illuminated, and the effect as viewed from the shore was magnificent.

A CORRECTION.

The Ridgeway items of the Tecumseh HERALD for last week contained a misstatement which we wish to correct. The item referred to read as follows: "Kelley & Nobles threshed 44 acres of wheat for Chas. Underwood in three-quarters of a day, the yield being nearly ten bushels to the acre." Chas. Underwood only had twenty-eight acres threshed, the yield being about fourteen bushels to the acre. The correspondent for Ridgeway has either been misinformed or else he wilfully made the false statement, thinking to hurt Mr. Underwood by so doing. Mr. U. however wishes everybody to know that such statements do not hurt him financially and that he is still able to pay 100 cts on the dollar.

The old cemetery is being treated to a cleaning up, something badly needed for a long time.

Sebastian Finkbinder, a farmer living five miles East of here met with an accident Wednesday forenoon that will, in all probability cost him his life. As near as your correspondent can learn, Mr. Finkbinder was cutting oats and had a colt as one horse in the team, hitched on the near side. The old horse needed urging occasionally to keep up his end and in reaching over to tap the horse, his head was caught by the rake which threw him in front of the knives, at the same time the horses took fright and ran away. His brother Geo. hurried to the spot, attracted by the cries of the son of the wounded man, and found Sebastian terribly mangled, both hands being cut off and deep cuts on either limb, back and shoulders. He was assisted to the house and physicians summoned. Deep sympathy is felt for the afflicted man and family.

MACON MUSIC.

The ice cream social given by the Ladies Temperance Union on the evening of the 9th inst. was a brilliant success. Early in the evening the grove thronged with people, estimates upon the number ranging from 300 to 500. The carefully prepared literary and musical proram was excellently presented throughout. No part was deserving of adverse criticism. Miss Grayson, Tecumseh's nightingale, deserves especial mention, but we refrain from even attempting anything like an adequate commendation. The unequivocal remarks of Rev. E. D. Chandler of Chicago, upon the evils of the drink traffic, the position of the ministry upon the question, and the ineffectual attempts at regulation in our great western metropolis were well received by the audience. The Cornet Band did themselves much credit by the exceptionally fine music which they discoursed throughout the evening. Twenty five gallons of ice cream did not suffice the eager crowd for more than three-quarters of an hour. We think the unusually large attendance of people, their liberal patronage, the instructive and elevating character of the program, the utter absence of any rowdyism, and the undivided interest manifested by all should combine to make the Union and the community at large feel justly proud of this the most successful of Macon's grove socials.

FROM THE WESTERN GOTHAM

CHICAGO, Aug. 12th, 1889.

DEAR HERALD—The Lenawee Club met as per notice, in Lincoln Park, last Saturday afternoon, and a more glorious day could not have been wished. The attendance was good and those of our Tecumseh contingent who failed to get around there missed one of the jolliest treats of the season.

All were exceedingly interested in the coming reunion and picnic. The members of the club are determined to make it a great success, and they are going to, too. The committee meet to-night at the Grand Pacific, and will commence work in earnest. Another meeting of the club will be called some time next week (date to be determined to-night,) when the plans of the committee will be given to the club, and all asked to go to work with a will.

This city is at present enjoying a perfect epidemic of crime. Murders, robberies and assasinations are so common that we pay but little attention to the report of each succeeding outrage. The only thing that can be done is to put the election of judges and police justices out of politics. Thugs, gamblers, ward heelers and criminals of all sorts dominate at the ward primaries, nominating men that they know will see to it that the crime is not punished.

This is the last year that will see the old exposition building on the lake front. After the shows this fall the building will be torn down, and before another season a new and more imposing edifice will be built.

The park commissioners are making improvments in all of the parks this summer. The west side commissioners are spending $50.000 in improving Union Park, and they have a large force of men at work in it now. A large number of improvements are to be seen in Garfield Park now. The Lincoln Park commissioners are building a roadway out in the lake, along the breakwater, and will make one of the most novel park drives of it, with a long stretch of water between it and the shore, where boat crews can hold regattas.

I had not been in Lincoln Park for several weeks until I went to attend the picnic, and I was astonished to see the work that has been done around that portion of the park devoted to the managerie. No one without wading through a lot of dry figures can realize the vast sums yearly expended to further beautify this already beautiful park.

I have not visited Jackson or Washington Parks this season, but I understand that the work goes on there as well as on the west and north sides.

At the National G. A. R. encampment soon to be held in Milwaukee, Mrs. M. K. Elliott has been put on the programme with such speakers as Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Mrs. Annie Wintermeyer, and Anna Dickenson, Gen. Sherman, Commissioner Tanner and Gen. Warner, and she recieves equal honors.

Yours Ever,
OLD HILARITY.

STRANGE EXHIBITION.

THE BEAUTIFUL AND MYSTERIOUS SECRETS OF THE WATER.

Singular Show of Fishes—Their Haunts, Habits, Breeding and Food—Weird Effects of Colored Sights in the Water—Extraordinary Display by the State Fish Commission of Michigan.

One of the most remarkable triumphs of modern civilization is the artificial propagation and distribution of valuable food fishes. And one of the most complete and successful government establishments in the world for hatching and distributing fish, is that of the State Fish Commission of Michigan. This state has the largest inland fishery of any state in the union. Its fishing grounds cover the vast area of 37,000 square miles in lake waters alone, and from one-third to one-half as much more in streams and inland lakes—that is a fishing area, all told, about as large as the land of the whole state. These waters teem with the choicest fish in the world. The annual catch therefrom is of immense commercial value, and mounts into millions of dollars. Choice locations in Michigan waters constitute the and fisherman of the American continent. Among the game fish that delight the master of rod and reel are the lordly muskallonge, the gigantic Mackinaw trout and siscowet, the great salmon trout, large and small mouthed bass, brook trout, grayling, pike, catfish, perch, rock bass, pickerel, silver eels, and others; while the fame of the lakes is world wide for its large and delicate white fish, fresh water herring, etc. All these fish and waters are under the care of the state board. It is their work to keep the waters constantly replenished with fine fish.

The Michigan Fish Commission have charge of

THREE LARGE HATCHERIES

maintained by the state. The largest is at Detroit, having a capacity for rearing one hundred and sixty millions of white fish yearly. One at Petoskey, with a capacity of thirty-three millions, has been discontinued. One is at Paris, near Grand Rapids, for rearing brook trout, with a capacity of one and a half millions annually. There is also a corporation at Glenwood. Commissioners and the hatcheries superintendents constantly study the habits and experiment with the rearing of all sorts of valuable food fishes. Some idea of the vastness of their work may be gathered by the amount of fish they have planted in the lakes and rivers of Michigan within ten years. During this period they have stocked our waters with of 452,031,500 white fish; 8,097,900 brook trout, 12,700 carp; 176,000 schoodic salmon; 4,500 bass; 50,112,000 wall-eyed pike; besides great numbers of California trout, silver eels, grayling, lake trout, salmon trout, and other valuable fishes. Many streams and small lakes that were barren have been restocked with fish in abundance, and a vast amount has been added to their value. Each year the quantity of fish bred and planted is increased. The good result is shown in the fact that the fish in the great lakes are steadily increasing, and the catch grows larger yearly.

The great work has been performed so quietly, necessarily at remote places, and at such seasons that the great body of the people have little or no idea of how it is done. Consequently the State Fish Commission have resolved to make of their apparatus, methods and products at the approaching Detroit International Exposition, in the form of the largest, most complete and most interesting show of fish and fish hatching ever seen in this country. There will be constructed an artificial lake or pool, with rock walls, lilies, wild rice and other aquatic plants; an immense aquarium, constructed in a cave, so that deep water fishes can be observed through glass openings in the rock many feet below the surface, like the exhibition now attracting so much attention at the World's Fair in Paris; running brooks, pools, waterfalls, fish stairways, to show salmon and trout ascending streams, etc. There will be fish of all sizes and ages shown, together with the apparatus of the state hatcheries. The fish will be shown as nearly as possible in their natural haunts, with their natural food and habits of life. Competent experts with plenty of money will labor to make the exhibition a most interesting one. The exposition managers provide ample ground and abundance of water. A unique system of electric and colored lights will add to the effect and beauty of the show. The following fish will certainly be shown, and as many more as can be procured in season: Herring, brook trout, siscowet, small-mouthed bass, large-mouthed bass, rainbow or mountain trout, German brown trout, wall-eyed pike, grayling, pike, salmon, trout, perch, German carp, muskallonge, white fish, sturgeon, gar pike, silver eels, catfish, rock bass, blue gills, suckers, red-horn, sunfish, etc.

To thousands of people this will be the most novel exhibition they have ever seen. Salmon will be shown in the act of leaping high artificial waterfalls.

THE STRANGE SECRETS OF THE WATERS

and their inhabitants will be laid bare to the spectators. Colored lights will produce rare and beautiful effects in the waters. The methods of artificial hatching will be explained. The beauty and elegance of many of these live game fish will be pictures that will long live in the memory. The exhibition will also be of great value in teaching people who care to learn how to propagate fish, and in giving valuable pointers to fishermen and fish culturists from other states, and to naturalists, especially as to the intelligence of fishes, and their capability of being tamed and made pets of. To the women and children, particularly, will this novel exhibition be a delight, long to be remembered with pleasure. And many a man will learn the to him strange lesson, that the pond or stream on his farm can be made to yield a larger cash income per acre, than the richest land he ever cultivated, if he will only make good use of the opportunities that the students of nature have wrested from her storehouse of valuable secrets. Perhaps some day in the future, counties and states will compete with each other at fairs, in the exhibition of improved breeds of fish, as they now do in exhibitions of improved cattle, sheep and swine.

JUST DO YOUR BEST.

The signs is bad when folks commence
A-findin' fault with Providence,
And balkin' 'cause the earth don't shake
At ev'ry prancin' step they take.
No man is great till he can see
How less than little he would be
If stripped to self, and stark and bare
He hung his sign on ev'ry door.

My doctern is to lay aside
Contentions, and to stand pat:
Jest do your best, and praise or blame
That follers that, counts jest the same.
I've allus noticed great success
Is mixed with troubles, more or less,
And it's the man who does the best
That gits more kicks than all the rest.

—James Whitcomb Riley

SINNED, BUT FAITHFUL.

When the rush for the Kansas farming lands was at its height, and eastern farmers, tired of the red soil at home, were selling out at a sacrifice in order to join the pilgrimage to a land rumored to be literally flowing with milk and honey—where broad and productive acres could be had for the asking—Andrew Wright, an honest, practical young Granger who had spent all his life in the Mohawk valley, was taken with the western fever. He was not wealthy in the goods of the world, but he had a wife and 2-year-old boy that helped to more than make up for the lack of financial resources.

By shrewd bargaining he found after he had sold everything he owned that he had enough crisp bank bills in his hands to go to the west and make a start on the new place. His objective point was Kansas, but when almost there he was induced by a land agent to go over into Nebraska and take a quarter section within three miles of that muddy and erratic stream dignified by the name of Platte river.

Once settled, and with a three room sod house built on his claim, he started in to work with a will, and at the expiration of two years he found himself well on the road to the complete ownership of as fine a farm west of the red Missouri as "lay outdoors."

His one great trouble was the scarcity of farm hands in the busy season; so it was not at all surprising when one day a tramp who applied for work was taken in as almost one of the family and looked upon as a veritable godsend by the overworked young emigrant.

"Tony" Williams, as the newcomer called himself, was a hard looking, uncouth sort of individual, who worked with a will during the day and at night romped with little 4-year-old Joey until the lad used to watch for his coming, and find the most pleasant hour out of the twenty-four when Tony was with him.

It was rather a queer sort of friendship, but it lasted all through the winter, and until one spring night, when the old restless spirit came back upon him and the farm hand packed up his little bundle and quietly stole away in the darkness.

A year spent in the mining districts did not increase "Tony's" financial condition nor his appearance, either, for that matter, but it found the young farmer just so much nearer to the complete ownership of his quarter section, and at the expiration of that time the tramp turned his face to the rising sun, and by dint of sundry "lifts" and stolen rides on freight trains, found himself one fitful night treading the land he had plowed some months before. It hardly seemed like the same place to him, for instead of the sod house there stood a one story frame building, and less than a hundred yards away was a big enough barn.

"I'll jest crawl into ther barn;" soliloquized Tony, "so's not to wake ther folks. I wonder how the little chap is and if he will be glad to see me. They're pretty white sort of people, and I guess I'll stick by 'em this time and take ther old man's advice an' make a man outer myself."

Thus satisfying his conscience at having run away, he crept into the barn, and half burying himself in a pile of straw which had been left near the open door, was soon asleep.

It was hours later when a lurid red glow, which lighted up the sky and heated the air for miles around, caused Tony to shift uneasily on his rough but comfortable bed and to finally open his eyes and an instant later jump to his feet with a bound.

The prairie was on fire!

Away off, on what seemed like the lower edge of the horizon, was a sheet of flame which had formed itself into a barrier through which none might pass and live. Forked tongues of fire, leaping from the mass, licked at the air as if to find more food for their greedy appetite. The tall, dry grass swayed and shivered as if each particular stalk was endowed with life and was making an effort to escape a certain fate.

As the tramp looked, particles of burned herbage floating down the wind fell about him and he heard distinctly the crackling of the consuming element as it ate its way through the matted growth.

The grandeur of the sight stupefied him, and he was lost in contemplation of the awful spectacle. The uneasy lowing of the cattle, and the fretful whinnying of the horses aroused in him a sense of the danger, and he instinctively turned and looked towards the house.

There was no sign of life.

It was time for action now, and he had already lost many valuable minutes. He ran to the house and beat with both hands on the door.

"Mr. Wright, the prairie's on fire—the prairie's on fire!"

There was no answer. Time was precious now, and when Tony saw a spade standing up against the side of the house it seemed to him like a providence, and he took advantage of it. The door went in with a crash and as he jumped through the opening he met Wright coming out of the bed room.

The room was brilliantly lighted by the reflection, but not a word of recognition was spoken.

"Get the horses," said Wright, in a low tone, and when the tramp went through the door Wright turned back to the room.

"Our only hope is the river," he said to his wife, who with a white, drawn face, was hurriedly dressing Joey, but her poor trembling, nervous fingers made little headway with the task.

When Tony came with the two horses, Wright and his wife took one while the tramp held Joey in place on the other. There were three miles to ride to the river and safety, and all but the boy looked with anxious eyes at the line of thundering flame, while the farmer sighed as he thought of the destruction that fringe of ragged fire would do his place.

But there was no time for sentiment, so away they started, leaving all but hope behind. For two miles the horses kept almost side by side, and then it began to look as if the race was not going to be an easy one for the heavy, well fed animals. Steadily the fire had gained until now, as they were almost in sight of the river, a sweep of the wind seemed to hurl the flames at them and their throats became so parched they could hardly breathe. Tony's horse, bearing the lighter burden, sped ahead, but the struggles of the other animal were becoming so labored that he slacked. Wright beat with his fists at the tired beast, who, faithful enough under his double burden, tried hard to respond by an increase of speed, but it was no use, for with the effort he went down on his knees, throwing the two heavily to the ground.

As the woman shrieked in her downward flight the tramp heard, and turning in his uncertain seat he looked in time to see two motionless forms, the struggling horse, and then, like a thing of life bending to grasp its prey, the wave of death swept over them.

Everything seemed a blur to the tramp after that, for when he opened his eyes an hour later he was lying on the opposite side of the creek, with Joey near by, watching with wondering eyes the glare of the embers on the blackened waste. He remembered nothing but the going down to death of the farmer and his wife, and realized the fact that he had a new burden to bear in the care of the orphan boy.

When strength came back to him he picked Joey up in his arms with a feeling of tenderness he had never known before and made for the ranch of the nearest neighbor, some miles away, where he told the story and found willing hands to help in the sad ceremony of consigning the charred remains to a decent grave.

As for himself, Tony was for going over into the Colorado diggings, leaving the boy with the new friends, but Joey refused to be separated from his protector, so with a little purse donated by the big hearted farmer and with a resolve to devote himself to his charge, the tramp took the orphan up into the mines and prospected with the hundreds of others for nature's wealth.

The erection of a new cabin announced the fact that he had come to stay, and during the months which followed the boy grew strong and hearty under his foster father's care and became the life of the camp. As a miner, poor, inexperienced Tony was an indifferent success, although he managed to keep a sack of flour and a rasher of bacon in the provision box, and occasionally made a barter with a wandering Jew for little delicacies for Joey.

But even this poor luck was not destined to last, and when one night the boy cried because he was hungry, and the tramp knew there was nothing in the little place to eat, he became desperate and walked out in the cool night air of the mountains to think what was to be done.

There had been days in his life when he had little respect for the eighth commandment, and it was very natural then, at this critical period, that his uneducated mind should urge him to take from others to supply himself and the boy. He tried to reason that it was right enough under the circumstances, but his logic was not powerful enough, and he put an end to the whole matter by saying to himself as a sort of mental apology:

"Ef it wasn't for Joey it 'ud be diff'rent, but he's got to be looked after somehow."

After that the provision box in Tony's cabin was always full to overflowing, and the tramp grew so extravagant as to send to a far away city for a new suit for the boy, who, delighted at the new prosperity, was happier than ever and forgot entirely the pangs of hunger which had racked his little frame. One morning, however, the boy, who was well on to 6 years old, woke and found himself alone. He lay a long while waiting for Tony and then dressed himself and went out.

It was but natural when he saw a crowd around the Red Light saloon that he should make for that point, and he did, calling all the while with his shrill little voice for "Uncle Tony."

One of the men picked the boy up and carried him back to the cabin, while the rest were gathered about the prostrate figure of a man which lay partly propped up by a folded blanket in front of the saloon. The man on the ground was saying in a weak, thin voice:

"I allus tried to do ther squar thing, pards, although I hev made some slips in my life. I don't mind going hungry myself, for that's nothing new, but I couldn't see the kid want, and I had to do somethin'."

After a brief pause he continued, although in a fainter voice:

"I don't blame Jim for pullin' on me, cuz I admit I was in his place to do him, but he done me. I know I'm going fast now, but, pards, look after ther kid. He aint got nobody now, and I done ther best I"——

The rest was indistinct, and when the convulsive twitch which had stopped the sentence ended, Tony was dead.

He had been as faithful to his trust as he knew how, but his life had been the price of his sin.

It was a long time before Joey became reconciled to have any one else take Tony's place, but the griefs of childhood are not lasting, and it was not until later years that the boy fully realized the sadness of his early life.—Fred A. Wilson in The Graphic.

"THE BEST IS THE CHEAPEST."

MANY persons are under the impression that Ivory Soap is expensive, and intended for the use of the wealthy only. The fact is, the price is lower than for ordinary soaps, quality considered, for in the "Ivory" no "cheapeners" or "makeweights" are used, so the buyer gets all "true soap" for her money. Its harmlessness, durability and efficiency admit of its being used for all purposes with equal satisfaction and economy in the families of the rich or poor.

A WORD OF WARNING.

There are many white soaps, each represented to be "just as good as the 'Ivory';" they ARE NOT, but like all counterfeits, lack the peculiar and remarkable qualities of the genuine. Ask for "Ivory" Soap and insist upon getting it.

STRANGE RESURRECTION

OF ANCIENT MOUND BUILDERS AND INDIAN WARRIORS

Exhumed in Digging the Foundations for the International Exposition Buildings in Detroit—Curious and Interesting Facts About Prehistoric Races and Their Works.

In making excavations for the foundations for the buildings for the great Detroit International Exposition, the workmen, a few days ago, unearthed a large number of skeletons. There were nearly 100 skulls and skeletons exhumed, with specimens of pottery, fragments of arms of stone and metal, and other relics. These skeletons seem to have been deposited together in a pit, and then covered with earth. As the place is known to have been used for burial places by the Indians for many generations, it is more than probable that there are hundreds more of like remains in the vicinity. There is a grim fitness in the fact that so great an enterprise as the International Exposition causes an upheaval among the oldest inhabitants, alike among the living and the dead, as it to anything they ever knew or dreamed of. This find may make a valuable and interesting collection, with additions from other sources, to an archæological exhibit of Indian and prehistoric relics and antiquities at the Exposition.

Michigan is rich in traces of the ancient Mound Builders—a race that preceded by unknown centuries of time the Indians found here upon the advent of the white man. That prehistoric race worked the copper mines of the upper peninsula, wove cloth, manufactured pottery, made weapons of copper, carried on a wide commerce, and constructed earthwork fortifications and burial and other mounds.

A HUGE BURIAL MOUND

700 to 800 feet long, 300 to 400 feet wide and forty to fifty feet high was a conspicuous object near the site now occupied by the Exposition building. Most of the vast tumulus has disappeared before the plow and spade. It contained thousands upon thousands of skeletons that had been buried in heaps. For generations it was the practice of the Indians of Michigan and parts of Canada to bring many canoe loads of skeletons, at stated periods, to this great mound, and inter them together in shallow pits that were afterward covered with earth. Besides there were many single burials of chiefs and noted warriors.

This mound was originally constructed by a race preceding the Indians, traces of whose remains have been found in great abundance at a greater depth than the Indian relics. There is no doubt that the earlier occupants of the great mound burned the bones of their dead in heaps and perhaps the flesh also, thus constituting the

FIRST DETROIT CREMATION.

There were various other mounds and relics near by. Not far above, on the banks of the Detroit river, was a group of mounds, from which many bones and relics have been taken, including arrow and spear heads of stone, copper needles and other implements, pottery, shells, beads, etc. In 1870 fourteen bodies were disinterred near Fort Wayne, with an earthen crock at the head of each. In excavating the foundations for the Twenty-fourth street police station a number of skulls and parts of skeletons were uncovered. Below Fort Wayne was formerly an oval embankment or of low earthworks, inclosing about an acre and a half of land. It had a ditch, eight feet wide, partly outside and partly inside its low walls, and a gateway fifty feet wide on the river front. There was a marsh all around, except a narrow neck connecting with the higher land. This neck showed traces of being protected by parallel embankments.

The remains found in the Detroit mounds are of singular value. They show skulls of the lower strata, that, even to the uneducated eye, appear to belong to different races. Some of the remains show a race of stature much below that of the average Indian, and skulls with such low and receding fronts as indicate an intelligence but little above brutes, belonging to the lowest order of savagery. Among the most curious remains are so-called because each one has a hole cut in it of an inch and a half to two inches in diameter, evidently by some sharp stone or metal tool. But the piece of bone thus cut out was carefully replaced before burial. Conjecture is at a loss to account for this.

It may have been to remove the brain; or it may have been to open a door for the spirit to leave the body, as the Indians were advanced enough in civilization to know that the brain was the seat of knowledge, or the residence of the spirit, and these perforated skulls are comparatively modern and Indian, although prior to the advent of the whites. The Detroit mounds also raise the important question whether the Indians, or their prehistoric predecessors, were acquainted with iron, some traces that seem to indicate where iron has disappeared being found in the mounds. It is said that traces of iron have not been discovered in the known to be ancient graves of the mounds in any other state.

ALL OVER THE STATE

are curious traces of a vanished race. Burial mounds are found in many places, the most notable being near Grand Rapids and Detroit. There was formerly a stone mound on the island of Mackinac. Earthwork fortifications, enclosing springs or supplied with water by ditches, existed on the Clinton river in Macomb county, with burial mounds near it; upon a small lake in Gilead, Branch county; near Prairie Ronde; near Marshall; several on the Kalamazoo river; a very large work near Three Rivers, St. Joseph county; on Climax prairie, and in other places. Some of these prehistoric forts were square; some a line of breastworks across a point of land; but most were circular or oval. Perhaps the most curious of all the remains of a prehistoric people are the

ANCIENT GARDEN BEDS

found in the counties of St. Joseph, Cass, and Kalamazoo; at Three Rivers, Schoolcraft, Kalamazoo, Prairie Ronde, Galesburg, Gilead, etc. In these places the ground was regularly platted into what seemed to be raised garden beds of regular forms, with sunken walks between, and the earth showing supposed evidences of having been at some time in the remote past annually cultivated. These garden beds covered large spaces—300 acres in one instance—and were not the work of Indians, who did not have even a tradition to account for them, and who were not an agricultural people.

Perhaps the prehistoric race who created these strange garden beds may have had, in their long-forgotten age, their great International Fair and Exposition. Who knows?

IN GOLDEN PASTURES.

MILLIONS ON MILLIONS OF DOLLARS WORTH OF FINE STOCK.

The Grandest Stock Display Ever Seen in the West—Magnificent Exhibition Preparing for Farmers and Stock Breeders.

The northwest has become, within a few years, just one of the most noted, if not the most noted, stock breeding sections of the Union, particularly for breeding farm stock—breeds of horses especially for farm work and teaming; breeds of cattle especially for butter, other breeds especially for beef, and others for working oxen; breeds of sheep for wool and other breeds for mutton; and breeds of hogs for the production of the best and most profitable pork. The old time farmers would have laughed at the notion of breeding a special class of horses for farm work, or a special class of cows for butter. Times were when the only idea of improved horses was trotters or racers for the track or road. Any mongrel was good enough for farm work. And the best cattle were "all round," equally for butter, beef and work, instead of a special breed for each.

"BEFORE THE WAR"

the northwest bred some noted trotting and running horses. But the breeding of Percherons, Clydesdales, Shire, French draft and French coach horses for work is a business that has developed since the war. So also is the rearing of sheep from costly flocks of the best blood in Europe, and cattle from the best herds not only of Great Britain but of all the countries of Europe. The northwest now has dozens of stock farms and scores of stock breeders with reputations that cover the whole continent, and animals that command princely prices. Such Michigan names as those of William Ball, of Hamburg; James M. Turner, of Lansing; Savage & Farnum, of Detroit, and other noted Michigan breeders are known and honored in all countries where there are herd books, stud books or flock registers, and Ohio and Indiana can boast of many of the same sort. In proportion to her farming, population and her suitable area, of the states and of all countries on this half of the globe as a stock raising state. By the last census the value of Michigan live stock reached the enormous aggregate proportion and value of one-tenth of her entire farm property, or about fifty-six millions of dollars! Only nine states surpassed Michigan in the number of horses, eight in oxen, ten in milch cows, and three in sheep; and each of these states was either larger in suitable cultivated area, older in the business, greater in population and wealth, or with peculiar advantages of climate and soil. The next census is confidently expected to show such an enormous advance in Michigan stock raising as will make her supremacy self-evident.

MICHIGAN STANDS AT THE HEAD

Popular interest in stock raising, stock improvement, and stock exhibitions is constantly and rapidly increasing, as are also the number and proportions of investments of capital in the business of stock raising of improved breeds. And skill in developing the finest animals is naturally acquired by practice and experience. Most of the various classes of stock breeders have fairs, meetings and exhibitions. They also lend an important part to county, district and state fairs. Sheep shearing festivals and flock shows are common and popular, and show a gratifying annual increase in the number of the best animals with accredited pedigrees. Progress in rearing Jersey, Alderney, Durham, Devon, Dutch Belted, Holstein Freisen, Hereford, polled and other choice varieties of cattle, is also marked and gratifying. While there are no especial shows of improved swine, except at fairs, the number and quality of the most famous breeds are steadily increasing, and the original razor-backed mongrel hog of the early farmers has almost disappeared. But, while stock breeders have displayed many excellent exhibits at fairs and festivals, they have

NEVER HAD AN ADEQUATE EXHIBITION.

At the county, district and state fairs the usual custom has necessarily been to provide stock with limited quarters in unsightly rough board sheds and stalls, strewn with litter, ill-smelling, unattractive, inconvenient and dirty. Cattle and horses have been generally led or driven about a ring that is often foul with mud or cloudy with dust, and the people, momentarily attracted, are presently driven off to more agreeable and cleanly exhibits. Trotting and racing stock have been given the best chances for attractive display, and therefore naturally have occupied the most popular attention. Besides, the local and state fairs have not drawn together enough exhibits of stock from other states and Canada to afford liberal opportunities for comparisons that will accomplish the most good for home breeders. The fair managers have made commendable efforts but they have not been provided with enough capital to furnish first class facilities for stock shows.

The great International Exposition, to be held in Detroit on September 17-27, will afford the stock breeders, farmers and people the first really adequate opportunity for not only of their splendid improved stock of Michigan, but also of numerous and valuable exhibits from the best flocks and herds of Canada and the other states. The stock buildings will be of immense size, elegant, clean, carefully regulated and kept, lighted by electricity, thoroughly watered and provided with every appliance even to the point of luxury, and so arranged that the stock show will be as attractive as possible to the immense crowds of visitors, and a pleasure even to the most delicate ladies. The display ground will be ample, will be separate from other and disturbing exhibits, and will be in continued use, so that at all hours an exhibition of fine stock will be going on alike upon the display ground and in the stalls, stables and pens. It will undoubtedly be the grandest exhibition of powerful horses and splendid cattle ever seen in the northwest, with scenes constantly realizing Rosa Bonheur's world-famous picture of "The Horse Fair." And the display of sheep and swine will be no less extraordinary. The farmers have never had such an opportunity, and will no doubt take advantage of it by thousands, and reap a benefit from it that will add greatly to their business interests for many years to come. And the managers of fairs will learn valuable lessons as to the best methods for securing, caring for and displaying farm stock.

Besides there will be a splendid display of racing and road horses, and exciting speed contests upon a specially excellent track, so that horses of all classes will be amply provided for. The business energy, enterprise and vast outlay of capital necessary to produce such an exhibition constitutes a public benefit which deserves wide recognition.

We do not hesitate to guarantee them every time, and we stand ready to refund the purchase price, if satisfactory results do not follow their use. THE UNION PICNIC.

A GALA DAY AT SAND LAKE FOR THE FARMERS' CLUBS OF NORTHERN LENAWEE.

A Beautiful Day, a Large Crowd and a Fine Program—Boating, Feasting and Fun Ad Libitum.

Two years ago this summer, the various farmers' clubs of this vicinity appointed a committee of consultation and resolved to hold a union picnic. They gathered at Putnam's in June, 1887, and enjoyed a very pleasant day's recreation. Last year they repeated the experiment, and they were gratified by a largely increased attendance. This year it was decided to wait until the hurrying season was over among the farmers, and Aug. 7 was the date fixed upon for their third annual meeting.

Mr. Putnam has made several notable improvements since last year. The entire grove has been thoroughly cleaned and the rubbish removed or burned. A fine base ball plat has been laid out east of the hotel, by draining the marsh and covering it with sand. The dock has been extended out into deeper water and a lot of new row boats added to his stock. He had the largest crowd that day we have ever seen there, but he entertained them without any [illegible]

To say the meeting more than met their most sanguine expectations would be putting it very mildly. The day opened cool, bright and beautiful. It was a model day for a day's sport at the lake. Soon after breakfast the picnickers began to arrive and by nine o'clock a good crowd had gathered. Putnam's barns were filled and by noon scores of vehicles were scattered through the grove. Promptly at noon the tables were spread and the assembled hundreds sat down to the repast. After refreshments were disposed of the crowd gathered around the stand west of the hotel and the program of the day was presented.

The officers of last year, who had charge of the meeting, were as follows:

President—J. F. N. Bowen.
Vice Pres.—M. J. Martin,
Secretary—L. M. Waldron.
Treasurer—A. G. Hall.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

A. P. Coddington—Farmers' Social Club.
Barzillai Hurry—Tecumseh and Franklin Club.
Chas. McNeil—Northern Lenawee Club.
Minor Davidson—Farmers' Union.
M. J. Martin—Macon Grange.
S. N. Munger—Union Literary and Lyceum
H. C. Daniels—West Franklin Club.
A. G. Hall—Raisin Farmers' Literary.

At 1:30 p.m., President Bowen called the meeting to order and Seth Simmons, of Franklin, opened the ball with a violin solo which was executed in his best style.

Rev. C. E. Conley, of Detroit offered prayer.

Miscellaneous business followed, some of which will produce good fruits hereafter. O. B. Finch, in behalf of the Commercial Telegraph Co. presented the expediency of incorporating that organization in the Union, and a motion was enthusiastically carried to that effect. Similar action was also taken with the Tecumseh & Macon and the Ridgeway and Macon telegraph lines, both of which were voted into the Union. A motion was also unanimously passed to incorporate the Britton, Tipton, and Onsted granges. This year the Union consisted of eight organizations, while next year it will comprise fourteen. The Farmers' Union will be heard from next year with no uncertain sound. The following officers were elected for 1890:

President—Wm. R. Wilson, Macon Grange.
Vice Pres.—O. B. Finch, C. T. Co.
Sec.—L. M. Waldron, T. & F. Club
Treas.—W. B. Keyser, N. L. Club.
Ex. Com—M. J. Martin, Macon; Chas. Benedict, Tecumseh; O. B. Finch, Raisin; Marshall Reed, Cambridge; W. S. Osborn, Franklin.

Pres. Bowen then gave the audience a brief but very appropriate address of welcome.

J. D. Shull, of Tecumseh, followed with the principal address of the day. It might be entitled, "Good Advice to Farmers," for it contained a goodly supply of that article. As Mr. Shull is himself a farmer, his remarks were of a practical character and made an excellent impression.

M. D. Alexander sang a solo, "Out on the Deep," which showed that he has lost none of his musical ability in late years.

Mrs. Wm. R. Wilson, of Ridgeway, read a fine essay entitled, "Cheering Thoughts to Farmers' Wives." It is needless to say that the essay contained many fine thoughts, beautifully expressed. She fully sustained her previous reputation as a fine essay writer.

M. D. Alexander gave another song in his inimitable manner, entitled "The Sea Beat Shore."

C. H. Bramble favored the audience with a good wholesome short talk.

S. C. Stacy, by request, read his pioneer poem, which had been written for a county pioneer meeting.

This closed the formal exercises of the day and the crowd then scattered. Some witnessed the base ball game, others took a ride on the steamer, others took a row, many enjoyed a stroll along the beach, while the spacious verandah of Putnam's hotel was the rendezvous of a jolly crowd during the balance of the afternoon.

A good game of ball was played between Harris' town line club and Dibble's club, which resulted in a victory for the town liners by a score of 6 to 1.

The attendance during the day must have reached at least 1000, and many good judges placed it as high as 1500. A large portion of the crowd remained through the entire afternoon and took a basket lunch at supper time, and it was late in the evening before the last of the picnickers departed for home. Macon and Ridgeway on the east, and Woodstock and Cambridge on the west sent good delegations, while the intervening towns added their hundreds to the crowd. The unqualified success of the affair throughout has shown what the farmers of this section can do in the picnic line when they put their shoulders to the wheel, and they have fully resolved to at least double the attendance next year.

The Clubs and Societies now forming the "Farmers Union," and which participated in the picnic are as follows:

PIONEERS IN COUNCIL.

THE FIFTEENTH ANNUAL MEETING OF THE LENAWEE COUNTY SOCIETY HELD AT MEDINA.

A Large Gathering in the Grove of the Old Medina Academy—Presentation of a Lengthy and Interesting Program.

The fifteenth annual assembly of County Pioneer Society which was held at Medina on the 6th, inst., was a grand success. The place for the meeting had been wisely chosen, the weather proved fine, and the old settlers of the southwestern quarter of the county turned out en masse to recount old times and renew old acquaintances. A platform for the officers and speakers was erected in that part of the grove west of the building, while under the trees on the east side the tables were spread.

Shortly after ten o'clock, President Dewey called the meeting to order, and Rev. R. Wooden offered prayer.

Mr. G. D. Moore made a brief welcome, and Thos. F. Moore gave a neat response.

The Fruit Ridge quartette rendered "Give Thanks unto our Lord." The choir was composed of Messrs. Geo. B. Horton and B. P. Thomas, and Misses Carrie Livesay and Helen Wooden. Their singing was excellent and added much to the day's program.

The president appointed a committee to nominate officers for the ensuing year.

G. W. Moore then gave a very interesting extempore sketch of the pioneers of the township of Medina.

Miss Mary Allis, of Madison, gave a recitation, "In the Catacombs," in a delightful manner.

Mrs. A. J. Sutton read an interesting essay on the "Daughters of the Pioneers."

A recess was then taken for dinner, and the way the lunch baskets were emptied was a caution.

At two o'clock the assemblage was again called to order and President Dewey gave a brief opening address as follows:

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN AND PIONEERS—It is a pleasure for me to welcome you and thank you for your presence today. We will try to make the day an agreeable and happy one. We came to this country young, now we are old and not many years before us. As for myself my age was 18 yrs. old when I came to this territory. It has been my home, lacking a month, for 60 years. We have had our joys and our sorrows in years that have passed, but let us enjoy the pleasures of this day with all the spirit of 50 years ago. I would say in behalf of this audience and pioneer association we give our cheerful thanks to the citizens of Medina for their courteous reception and untiring efforts to make this occasion one long to be remembered. Who among us is not alive to the sweet associations that give life tone and vigor, for that is the object of this meeting, in part, to mingle our voices together in the common bond of brotherhood. I see around me here today those who have been side by side from youth's manhood to old age. Where on the dial plate of time are we today. Many of us far over the ridge of noontime in human existence, our history made up and departure at hand. Thus through all, human life is being constantly repeated, and again replenished by succeeding pilgrims. When we are all gathered home to our Father, the world will continue on until time is no more.

Miss Flora Salsbury favored the audience with a pleasing recitation.

The choir sang "With the Tide," and F. A. Dewey read a paper, "Sketches of Michigan 58 years ago."

Vern Allen, of Morenci, gave an excellent essay on the "Press of Lenawee County."

Rev. Noah Brown delivered a carefully prepared address on the "Pioneer Ministers of Lenawee County." The committee on nominations submitted the following report, which was duly ratified by the meeeting:

Pres.—F. A. Dewey.
Vice Pres.—Thos. F. Moore.
Sec.—S. C. Stacy.
Treas.—Rufus Baker.
Ex. Com.—B. L. Hicks, Ogden; N. Shumway, Fairfield; D. D. Sinclair, Adrian; Cornelius Knapp, Rome; Geo. Howell, Tecumseh.

Miss Mary Allis gave another recitation, which brought down the house.

Several impromptu five minute speeches followed and more music by the quartette. It was after 4 o'clock when Pres. Dewey declared the meeting adjourned, and those in attendance began to turn their faces homewards.

During the afternoon the following names were added to the roll of membership:

NEW MEMBERS

E. B. Porick, 1837; O. E. Green, 1835; M. B. Southworth, 1830; Brackley Shaw, 1835; Wm. Older, 1833; Noah Brown, 1835; Ezra Cole, 1835; Mrs. Lemira Pierce, 1837; N Perkins, 1845; S. W. Curtis, 1840; O. Hotchkiss, 1834; M. P Stockwell, 1835; J. H. Livesay, 1837; Miss L. J. Clark, 1835; H. L. Perkins, 1837; R. W. Lewis, 1859; L. A. Johnson, 1846; Ed. Haff, 1860; William Wirt, 1851; C. L. Jewell, 1849; Albert Barker, 1836; Geo. W. Woodworth, 1840; John S. Johnson, 1844; W. D. James, 1859; Wm. Brown, 1835; M. L. Frazer, 1835.

Just before adjournment, the following resolution was presented by the secretary, and on motion the same was unanimously passed:

Resolved, That the Lenawee County Pioneer Society hereby tender their hearty thanks to the citizens of Medina for the generous entertainment provided for us today. Their bountiful liberality and large attendance has made this one of the most successful meetings ever held by the society.

OVER THE RIVER.

Died, at Cushenbury Springs, Cal., Monday, June 17, of lingering consumption, Janie Monaghan, beloved wife of Milton S. Pitzer, daughter of the late George C. and Wealthy Monaghan, and neice of the late Judge Stacy of Tecumseh.

The funeral services were held at Halleck, the Rev. Mr. Howell of the Congregational church, conducting the services. His words of consolation were taken from the 14th chapter of St. John; especially the 27th and 28th verses, which were such comfort to her in life, when her sorrow seemed more than she could bear. All the family were with her, excepting her beloved sister Lola and brother Clarence, whom she had hoped to see again. Here in her old home it seems but a little while since she left us for a milder climate on account of her health, which failed from over study and nervous strain, at the time she graduated. We all remember her as one of our brightest and most talented students. With an ambition way beyond her strength, and coming from a family of a literary and professional turn, many predicted a brilliant future for her. Illness changed all her plans, but no future, however bright, could have closed in a more triumphant death than her's. Just as the sun faded away in the west, she looked for the last time on earth and loved ones and went, so gladly to her Heavenly home and dear ones. For some time her physicians had said that only change of climate could prolong her life, and this she had had whenever her health demanded it. When finally she decided upon Orange, Cal., for a home, she wrote that she hoped that it would prove just the climate for her. For whether it helped her or not, it was too lovely a home to leave. So it was a great trial to her last spring, owing to the unusual fogs on the Pacific coast, to have to make a change to the dry lands of the Mojave, but she gained so that all felt encouraged, when suddenly, almost without a moment's warning, her little girl, an unusually bright and beautiful child, died. For days it was thought that the shock would kill her, and nothing but her perfect faith that it was God's loving goodness, could have brought her back to life and given her courage to make the earnest effort to live for the sake of her devoted husband and brothers and sisters, who had never allowed anything to stand in the way of her health, and who she felt could not give her up. She was taken to the mountains as soon as she was strong enough, where new scenes seemed to divert her mind for a time, but her longing to go was more than she had strength to overcome.

During the first of her illness, Mr. Pitzer believed she must regain her health, that it could not be she was so soon to give up her earthly hopes and plans, and so long her courage never failed, and she prayed for health and strength to use the talents God had given her. When she realized it was not to be, she was able to say, "I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content." And so often in her last suffering she said, "I can do all things through Christ, who strengtheneth me." Her daily life became an example of that love and charity which suffereth long and is kind, especially to those who had been deprived of the advantages she had always enjoyed, for she was thoughtful and courteous often beyond her strength. How true and honest was her friendship, only those who enjoyed it could know. Independent and fearless in her opinions and understanding and appreciating to the very last the vital questions of the day, it was no easy task to give up her share in life's work, yet she did it with the most unquestioning faith.

Her's was not a mournful resignation, coming just at the last, but for years, through intense suffering, a brave, hopeful, patient spirit, so that only those who were with her constantly ever realized how slight was her hold upon life. Yet hath he done all things well—Mark 7-37.

"Through the love of God our Savior
All will be well;
Free and changeless is his favor,
All, all is well.
Precious is the blood that healed us,
Perfect is the grace that sealed us,
Strong the hand outstretched to shield us;
All must be well."

A LIBERAL OFFER.

Always alive to the requirements and changes of the times the Detroit Free Press was the first to note the growing desire of readers everywhere for something new and fresh in the line of high class fiction. Out of the determination to satisfy this demand grew their unparelleled offer of $3,000 in Cash Prizes for the three best stories to be written for the Free Press. With the details of this remarkable enterprise our readers are doubtless familiar. That it has excited widespread interest and comment cannot be denied. The competition is ended; the hundreds of manuscripts are now in the hands of the judges and it is expected to announce the prize winners and begin the publication of the stories within two or three weeks. Look out for a literary sensation.

The reading public is on the qui-vive for the stories, hundreds having already sent in their subscriptions. The time is particularly auspicious for our agents to make a move all along the line, as everyone will be interested in reading these masterly serials. In order that none may be deterred on account of price we have concluded to offer the Weekly Free Press and the Tecumseh HERALD, both papers, four months for FIFTY CENTS.

Remember this offer includes both papers, but it means cash in advance when the papers are ordered. People should take advantage of it at once, to be ready for the prize stories as soon as they begin.

OBITUARY.

Died, on Friday, July 26th, Hessie Irene, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William J. Osborn. The accident which caused Hessie's death was peculiarly sad and shocking. She was a bright healthy girl, about two years and four months old, and was one of the gems of the family circle. Verily no one knows what a day or an hour may bring forth. In the morning she was the light of the household, making home merry with the innocent prattle of childhood. Before the setting of the sun her lifeless body lay in its shroud. It is a sad blow to father and mother, brothers and sisters, but they can find consolation at the Fount of every blessing. They can live for those who are left behind, and cherish the memory of the little one who has gone before. The funeral services were held on Tuesday July 30th, conducted by Rev. E. P. Pierce, and the casket containing Hessie's remains found a final resting place in the Franklin cemetery.

Darling Hessie, she has left us,
We shall hear her voice no more;
She has gone to meet her Savior
On that bright and golden shore.

The ringing laugh and childish prattle
Which brightened up that happy home
Are hushed forever now in silence;
Our darling girl is dead and gone.

And yet this fearful dispensation
We must not, for her sake, deplore,
For Hessie dwells in heavenly mansions,
She is not dead, but gone before.

Card of Thanks.

We desire to express our heartfelt thanks to our friends and neighbors for their kindness and sympathy shown us in the death and burial of our darling Hessie.

It would take a more remarkable elixir than that with which his distinguished namesake is experimenting to give the notorious "Dr." Hammond of Kalamazoo a long enough life to serve out all his sentences for divers offenses and misdemeanors. The Fish Commissioners of Michigan, at the coming state fair, will make a complete exhibit of their work, from the incubation of the egg to fish fit to grace the table of an epicure. This industry is of first importance to the farmer, who, by actual study of the process, will be incited to aid in the work, which in a few years will make our lakes and rivers abound in sport that will call thousands of visitors from other states to make their homes in Michigan for a portion of the year.

"Uncle Billy" Nixon, 82 years old, is one of the old-timers of Tecumseh. He used to have a pair of lungs strong enough to blow every hole in a fife half an inch bigger. He was out one day last week celebrating his birthday, and half of Tecumseh joined him in the blow-out. "Uncle Billy" has been a resident of Tecumseh something less than a hundred years, and can tell harrowing stories enough to place him in the ranks with Scove Stacy, Chas. Field and the rest of the Ananiases of the handsomest village in the county. He blows a rattling good fife yet, too.—Adrian Times.

See here, young man; we don't object to being enrolled among the silver grays with Uncle Billy Nixon, but we do object to having scriptural names slung at us in that reckless fashion.

Jas. Lowry's delivery horse didn't like the looks of a piece of paper flying in front of his head last Monday and suddenly started off down Chicago st. on a dead run. The sudden start caused Billy Smallidge to take a header out of the back end of the wagon, but he caught on to the end board, and the animal was soon stopped. The damage was slight.

Last Saturday evening while John Nyland was walking along the sidewalk opposite Slayton's warehouse, a horse and buggy was driven out of one of the allies and the vehicle struck him, knocking him down. Two wheels of the buggy passed over his body and his face was very badly cut and scratched. He was taken into Orr's drug store and medical attendance was summoned, when the gash in his face was sewed up and he was then conveyed home. During all this time he was unconscious, and on Sunday his condition seemed to be very critical. On Monday morning however he was much better, and we are glad to know that the prospects are now very favorable for his speedy recovery. It was a narrow escape from a fatal accident.

Tecumseh was well nigh depopulated last Sunday. A big crowd boarded the early excursion train to visit the state encampment at Battle Creek, a large number attended the Devils Lake camp meeting, and another big contingent went down to the Free Methodist camp meeting at Ridgeway. The congregations at the various churches were rather slim.

Notwithstanding that the Scott perfecting web press used by the Detroit Journal, has a capacity to print and fold over 20,000 complete papers per hour, additional facilities have been found to be necessary, and another and duplicate press is now being added to their equipment. On or about Aug. 20 they will begin to use both presses simultaneously with duplicate stereotype plates. The Journal has also just put in a new engine of three times the power of the one previously employed.

"A Yachting Party," a beautifully executed watercolor, is the fitting frontispiece for Demorest's Monthly Magazine for September. This is followed by a handsomely illustrated article on Bar Harbor, which almost makes us feel the cool breezes of that delightful summer resort. From the extreme east we are carried to the extreme west, and are treated to a very amusing account (to which the unique illustrations greatly add) of how two women took up a quarter section of land in Dakota, and successfully cultivated it.

The midsummer number of The Art Amateur is before us, as bright and attractive as ever. Two excellent colored plates are given away with this number: "Carnations" by Dangan, and "Illuminated Initials," from French manuscripts of the XIII century. The frontispiece, a very masterly decorative design, after Boucher, representing "Earth," is the first of a series of four which will be published consecutively. Montezuma, in "My Note Book," and Theodore Child, in the "Paris Exposition," very fully and conclusively describe the pictures at the Paris centennial exhibition. A GENEROUS OFFER.—The celebrated Dr. Gleason, after a practice of forty years, having during all that time made the cure of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption his special study, has in this time so perfected his treatment as to be able to cure nearly all who suffer from these complaints. Having reached the age of seventy years, he realizes that the time is near at hand when these valuable remedies must be in other hands or become lost to the world. Desiring that his Home Treatment should be within the reach of all, he has placed the prescriptions with the Hall Chemical Company; this company, knowing the wonderful success of the Home Treatment in the cure of all Throat and Lung Troubles, have decided to send the full treatment ON TRIAL to any one who wishes to try it. Dr. Gleason has also written a valuable treatise on these diseases, which is profusely illustrated with finely executed wood-cuts, showing the Head, Throat and Lungs as they are when diseased; it discusses in an able manner the cause and cure of these complaints; it is printed on heavy super-calendered paper and handsomely bound. This book, together with full instructions how to order on trial, will be sent free to all who will write and ask for it. Address

MARRIED AT SIGHT.

We had been upon the Mediterranean station for about a year when our commander ordered the ship to head for Marseilles.

I was then a young midshipman and enjoyed the leave on shore in a foreign port with boyish delight. There were six in our mess, and we managed to get shore leave so as to be together when it was possible to do so. This was the case one fine Sunday in the month of December, as mild and summer like in the south of France as a New England May day.

The singular experience of one of our number I have often told since about the mess table or camp fire, but have never put it into print.

We were strolling on the square known as Le Cours St. Louis, a sort of permanent flower market, where the women sit enthroned in tent like stalls of wood, encircled by their bright, beautiful and fragrant wares, while the manner of arranging the stalls, so that the vender sits raised some six feet in the air, gave a novel effect to the scene.

While we were idling away the hour in Le Cours St. Louis, with these roguish and pretty flower venders, we were all thrown into a state of amazement and curiosity by the appearance of a young girl of about 17, who rushed among us with a startling speed, and who, hardly pausing to regain her breath, said in excellent English:

"You are Americans, and, I trust, gentlemen. Is there one among you who will marry me?"

"We will all marry you," was the instant response, accompanied by hearty laughter.

"Ah, you are in sport, but I am in earnest. Who will marry me?"

There seemed to be no joke after all. The girl was positively in earnest and looked at one and all of us as coolly, yet earnestly, as possible.

"Here, Harry," said one who was rather a leader among us, and addressing Harry, "you want a wife," and he gave our comrade a slight push toward the girl.

For some singular reason Harry took the matter much more in earnest than the rest of us, and regarded the newcomer with a most searching but respectful glance. Approaching her he said:

"I do not know exactly what you mean, but I can understand by your expression of face that you are quite in earnest. Will you take my arm and let us walk to one side?"

"Yes; but I have no time to lose." And taking his arm they walked away together.

We looked upon the affair as some well prepared joke, but were a little annoyed at the non-appearance of Harry at our rendezvous on the quay. Our leave expired at sunset, and we dared not wait for him, as Capt. D—— was a thorough disciplinarian, and we didn't care to provoke him and thus endanger our next Sunday's leave.

On board we went, therefore, leaving Harry on shore. When we reported the question was, of course, asked where Midshipman B—— was, to which query we could return no proper answer, as we really did not know. He knew perfectly well that we must all be at the boat landing just before sunset.

Harry did not make his appearance until the next day at noon, when he pulled to the ship in a shore boat, and, coming on board, reported at once to the captain, who stood upon the quarter deck, and asked the privilege of a private interview.

The circumstances connected with the absence of Harry were very peculiar, and as he was one of the most correct fellows on board, his request was granted by the captain, who retired to his cabin, followed by the delinquent. After remaining with the commander for nearly an hour, he came out and joined us.

"What is the upshot of it, Harry?" we asked.

"Well, lads, I'm married—that's all."

"Married?" asked the mess, in one voice.

"Tied for life!" was the answer.

"Hard and fast?"

"Irrevocably."

"To that little craft you scudded away with?"

"Exactly. As good and pure a girl as ever lived," said Harry, earnestly.

"W-h-e-w!" whispered one and all.

"How did Old Neptune let you off?" we all eagerly inquired—that being the name the captain went by on board.

"He is hard on me," said Harry, seriously. "What do you think he demands, lads?"

"Can't say, what is it?"

"If I don't resign he will send me home in disgrace. That's his ultimatum."

"W-h-e-w!" again from all hands.

Harry told us his story in a desultory manner, interrupted by many questions and ejaculations, but which we will put into a simple form for the convenience of the reader.

Julie Meurice was the orphan child of a merchant, who had been of high standing during his life and who left a handsome fortune to endow his daughter on her wedding day, or, if not married before, she was to receive the property on coming to the age of 20 years. Her mother had died in her infancy, and her father, when she was 10 years of age, placed her in a convent to be educated, where she remained until his death, which occurred suddenly six months previous to the period of our sketch.

After his death Julie became the ward of her uncle, by the tenor of her father's will, and the period of her educational course having just closed at the convent, Hubert Meurice, the uncle, brought her home to his family circle. Mme. Meurice, it appears, was a scheming, calculating woman, and knowing that Julie would be an heiress she tried every way to promote her intimacy with her own son, who was an uncouth and ignorant youth of 18 years, without one attractive point in his character.

Hubert Meurice, the uncle of Julie, was a sea captain, whose calling carried him much away from his home. During his absence his wife treated Julie with the utmost tyranny, even keeping her locked up in her room for days together, telling her that when she would consent to marry her son, Hubert, she would release her and do all she could to make her happy. But to this Julie could not consent. Imprisonment even was preferable to accepting her awkward and repulsive cousin.

One day she overheard a conversation between her aunt and her hopeful son, wherein the mystery of her treatment was solved.

The boy asked his mother what was the use of bothering and importuning Julie so.

"If she doesn't want to marry me, mother, drop the matter. I like Julie, and she would make me a nice little wife, but I don't want her against her will."

"You are a fool," said the mother. "You know nothing about the matter. Her father's will endows her with a fortune at her marriage, even if it be at 17, just her present age. At 20 she receives the fortune at any rate. Now, don't you see if you marry her we are all fixed for life?"

"Does Julie know about the money?" he asked.

"No, of course not."

"It's a little sharp on her," said the boy.

"I'm looking out for you," said the mother.

"Just so," mused the hopeful.

"I am resolved that she shall marry you, and that is why I keep her locked up, so that she may not see some one she would like better. Your father is expected home next week. I want you to be married before he returns. He approves of it, but is a little too delicate about pressing matters so quickly. I know that no time is like the present time, so I have been making arrangements to bring this about immediately. I have got a Protestant clergyman who will perform the ceremony first, and then you can be married at any time afterward in the Catholic church, to make it valid on her side, for her father was a Catholic."

This was enough for Julie. She understood the situation fully now, and saw that her aunt would hesitate at nothing. The poor child feared her beyond description, and had yielded to her in everything, save this one purpose of her marriage with Hubert.

Julie was a very gentle girl; one upon whom her aunt could impose with impunity. She had no idea of asserting her rights, much less of standing up for them. But she was thoroughly frightened now, and resolved to escape at any cost from the tyranny which bound her. No fate could be worse, she thought, than to be compelled to marry that coarse, vulgar and repulsive creature.

The next day after Julie had heard this information was Sunday, the gayest day of the week in Marseilles, and, fortunately, Julie succeeded in making her escape from her aunt's house. Still, undecided where to go, and in her desperation fearing that at any moment she might be seized and carried back, she had wandered into the flower market, where she came upon us, already described.

As she explained to Harry afterward, she was intent only upon escape, and believed this to be her last chance. When she saw a half dozen young Americans, who seemed perfectly respectable, the idea that positive safety lay only in marriage dawned upon her, and she actually ran toward us, as we have related, the moment the thought developed itself.

Harry became more and more impressed with Julie's story as they walked along, while he was delighted by her innocent beauty and manifest refinement. It was all like a dream, almost too romantic for truth. Our "fate" sometimes comes to us in this singular fashion, he thought. "There is a tide in the affairs of men which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune." Suddenly he turned to her and said:

"Dare you trust me with your happiness?"

She looked at him thoughtfully with her soft, pleading eyes. Her brain was very busy; she remembered what awaited her at home, what had driven her thence, and then, in reply to his sober question, she put both of her hands into his with childlike trust.

They wandered on. Julie had always plenty of money in her purse, and they strolled into a little chapel on their way, where they found a young clergyman, who could not resist their request to marry them, backed by ten golden Napoleons, and so, though reluctantly and advising proper delay, he performed the marriage ceremony, aided by the sexton and his wife, who each received a Napoleon.

As an inducement, Harry had also told the clergyman that he was just going to sea, and that he must be married before he sailed, that not even one hour was to be lost.

"Perhaps I am saving the girl's honor," said the young clergyman, as he finally consented.

Julie came out of the chapel the wife of Harry B., who went with her to the Hotel du Louvre. From here he sent a pressing note to the American consul, who came to him early the next morning, and by the earnest persuasion of Harry the consul agreed to take the young wife to his own house until matters should be settled as it regarded their future course. In consul's house Julie found a pleasant and safe retreat for the time being.

Whatever might be said with regard to the propriety of the young folks' conduct, it could not be undone. They were irrevocably united as husband and wife. Harry was forced, however, to resign his commission. By the aid of the consul Julie's rights in relation to her fortune under her father's will were fully realized, and she came almost immediately with her young husband to America.

Harry B., by means of proper influence, once more entered the navy, the second time as lieutenant, and now wears a captain's epaulets.—"L. M." in New York News.
